

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

THE Editor feels sensibly the perplexities in which the present Work has involved him, and the objections to which the publication of it is exposed. Against the latter he endeavours to provide in the proper place; and to the former he must be contented to submit. Still there are two or three particulars, which he begs leave to take notice of here.

Of the general imperfections of the volumes he cannot be ignorant, nor of the dislikes which particular persons will have towards parts of it. Thus—the proper place for the Latin Dissertation to be read is at the beginning of the first volume; and the only reason for placing it in the second was to preserve some appearance of uniformity in the size of the volumes. Now a long Dissertation, and in Latin, at the beginning, will be a sufficient reason, with some persons, to lay it immediately aside. It is a bar at the very entrance. It will be deemed to savour of pedantry, if not of that species of vanity, which borders on impertinence. Even those disposed to peruse it, the presumption is, will come prepared rather to criticise, in parts, the Latinity, than to wade through the whole long course of Latinized argumentation. The writer admits, that there is apparent room for much censure on this head, has given the reasons for his conduct, and endeavoured to remove objections in the Address to his Subscribers; and he repeats here, that he stept, as it were, insensibly into this way of proceeding: all he intended, at first, was a Dedication, which he thought, in conformity with the greater part of the Privileges, would appear better in the Latin language than in the English, and that some things could be better said in that tongue, than in our own. But he has little reason to make pretensions, or to invite criticism: Since he left school and college, he has had few occasions of attempting Latin composition till of late years; and he is aware, that such as are critically acquainted with the niceties and elegancies of the Roman language, will find, in such a lengthened production, ample space for their animadversions.

As to the length of this Dissertation---the truth is, that the writer ventured to speak on a few points, which some might think he had better not have touched upon at all. This, too, he felt himself, so far as prudence was concerned: but having gone a certain length, he found it necessary to proceed; for there are certain cases, in which nothing is said or done without amplification. Declarations or propositions, and more particularly on delicate, disputed points, may, without a proper statement of facts, and a due mixture of arguments, appear like baseless assertions, or impudent dogmas. When the mind, too, breaks loose in quest of ideas, which (though familiar to it once) it may have lost, you cannot answer for its return: it is apt to lose all sense of distance; and writers, unfatigued by their own discursions, are apt to forget, that their readers may not possess the same degree of perseverance. Here, also, the writer perceives many repetitions, more, indeed, than he was aware of: for the English part of the volumes having been worked off a considerable time, and the sheets not being before him when he composed the Latin Dissertation, he finds he has brought together again several things, which being strongly impressed on his mind, followed in the natural order of his ideas; but having been spoken of in part elsewhere, they may be justly censured as repetitions.

With respect to the Latin Dissertation, to be still more particular, it may be thought by some, that the term, Generalis Dissertatio, and the manner of handling it, contradict what the writer states above, and in his Address to his Subscribers, to have been his original intention in writing it, viz. to make a short address, in the form of a Dedication: but the truth is, nothing more was intended, than to give a summary view of the contents of the volumes, with his reasons for publishing them. Such a summary, as it lies in the mind, is a sort of bird's-eye view, and may seem to occupy but little space there; but when put on paper, it falls, as it were, into perspective, and may run out to unforeseen length, and uncalculated varieties. It was done by piecemeal. The title was of subitaneous recollection; and those articles which run out to the greatest length, in the event, did not enter into the original design. These are the best reasons, which he can give, as an apology for the plan itself, and in explanation of its execution; of which a further account may be seen in the writer's Address to his Subscribers.

In the History of the University-Press, in the second volume, a few blank pages having been left standing a considerable time, the writer was obliged, as he drew towards the close of them, to measure every word, that his copy might not exceed the press-work to be formed; and, perhaps, the last paragraphs have expressed, though not incorrectly, yet not quite fully, what he meant to say.

Of the expenses attending the printing of certain works there mentioned, he spake generally, from the conversations of gentlemen, who, by their offices, could not but be well acquainted with particulars: he was not very attentive to the conversations; (one was in a mixed company) and the writer not being much interested, and not counting on any occasion for mentioning them, let the subjects pass, without charging his memory with particulars. But the main points he believes will be found quite correct.

In what he states of Mr. Wakefield's Silva Critica, he did not mean to say, that no part of it was printed at the expense of the University: he followed that gentleman himself; from whose Prefaces, Advertisements, and Dedications, to the different numbers of that work, may be collected—that three of them were printed at the expense of the University, to whom, therefore, as his alma mater, he is not wanting in expressions of respect, even to admiration—that he engaged not to treat on those doctrinal matters, in which he might differ from the Church—and that yet, through the interference of two gentlemen, who had undue influence over the University-Press, he was not permitted to print the two last numbers—and, that they were accordingly printed at the sole expense of the liberal-minded Mr. Tyrwhitt, who was himself, at the time, one of the Syndics.

What made the above transactions the more striking, was, that the two gentlemen of the Syndics, noticed by Mr. Wakefield, as directing their influence against him, were not only amply endowed both by the Church and University, but drank copiously themselves out of the funds appropriated to the Printing-Office. One of them, Dr. Kipling, received a large sum for bringing through the press a MS. Greek Testament, in the form of a Fac-simile, which, after all, was but indifferently executed.

Such-like observations flowed in the regular course of a History of the Cambridge-Press, and seemed to form a natural termination of it. They were made without the prejudices of party, any personal hostilities, or any motives from self-interest. Whatever civilities or favours he may have received at any time from honourable individuals, he never sought resources in the funds of the University Printing-House, nor is it likely that he ever shall: nor has he any reasons for particular enmities. Whatever feelings he may have indulged on this, or on other subjects, are in a common cause.

CADWALDUS divina gratia favente rex totius Britanniæ omnibus Christi fidelibus tam nobilibus quam plebeiis salutem. Notifico vobis, me concessisse Almerico, rectori scholarium Cantabrigiæ, et singulis suis successoribus legitime ordinatis, libertates, jura, consuetudines et privilegia super omnes scolares ibidem moram facientes. Sintque scolares et doctores illius celeberrimæ matris Philosophiæ, civitatis Cantabrigiæ à Cantebro ædificatæ, necnon à Grantino Comite honorabiliter muratæ, ab omni calumpnia, inquietatione et scandalo liberi, sicuti hæredes mei mihi habentur: Eidem insuper Almerico et ejus vicem gerentibus concedo potestatem cognoscendi tam in ignotis causis quam in notis, in modicis et in magnis, et eandem auctoritatem puniendi et dimittendi habeat quam mea curia, tantummodo hæc majestis crimine excepto, quemadmodum antecessores mei rectoribus ejusdem Civitatis concesserunt, et statuendo confirmaverunt, viz. Lucius, Asclepiodorus, Constantinus, Uperpendragon, Arthurus et pater meus Cadwallis Britanniæ patris altissimi gratia reges, qui civitatis Cantab. habitatores causa doctrinae et sanctitatis honorantes vitae, in reverentia habuerunt et amore, cum ex illa civitate praecipua processerunt philosophantes et scientiae amatores totius Europae. Quocirca omnipotentis Dei Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti auctoritate et perpetuae Virginis prohibeo et universis regni mei caeterarumque gentium in circuitu persistencium praepositis et primatibus praecipio, ut nullus rectorem civitatis praedictae, seu scholarem cujuscunque facultatis in eadem perturbare aut inquietare audeat, sed omnes pariter et singuli pontifices, reguli et principes, respectu scholarium et eisdem servientium tam in secularibus quam in ecclesiasticis causis praedicti rectoris iudicium expectent, sicuti praedecessores nostri sanxerunt. Si quis autem quovis modo deinceps sub aliqua occasione interrompere atque irritum facere hujusmodi privilegii testimonium nisus fuerit, a consorcio pietatis ultimi examinis ventilabro dispertitus sit.

HONORIUS episcopus, servus servorum Dei, dilectis filiis Doctoribus & Scholaribus Universitatis Cantabrigiæ salutem & apostolicam benedictionem. Dilectissimi in Domino filii, non absque labore & plurima turbatione didicimus, quomodo multitudine nefanda Paganorum Universitas vestra olim saluberrima vehementer affligitur, quorum pravitate nonnulli, propriæ salutis immemores, luporum faucibus & vulpina facie libertates & privilegiæ, quæ vobis & prædecessoribus vestris in eadem Universitate Studentibus gratiose indulsit sedes Apostolica, moliuntur enervare. Ita quod plures ecclesiarum præpositi absque rationis jure minus juste in vos jurisdictionem indebitam & insolitam usurpare, quanquam non consueverunt hactenus, ad Universitatem vestram accedunt, materiam perturbationis & discordiæ seminantes, non correccionis, emendationis aut reformationis ibidem officia exercentes, contra inhibitionem sedis Apostolicæ. Volentes igitur, ut tenemur, justitia suadente paci & tranquillitati Universitatis vestræ paterna sollicitudine salubriter providere, ubi clementia salvatoris poculum doctrinæ salutaris scientiæ hausimus tunc agentes in minoribus, prædecessorum nostrorum Romanæ ecclesiæ Pontificum Elutherii, Fabiani, Leonis, Simplicii, Felicis & Bonifacii vestigiis debite inherentes, auctoritate omnipotentis Dei districcius inhibemus sub pæna excommunicationis, quam veniens in contrarium ipso facto incurrat, ne quis Archiepiscopus, Episcopus, Archidiaconus, aut eorum officiales, seu visitatores generales aut speciales, à sede apostolica deputati, audeat in aliquem vestrum suspensionis vel excommunicationis seu interdicti sentencias, aut vos seu familiares vestros molestare præsumat. Sed Cancellarius cum Rectoribus de consilio saniorum & seniorum vestræ Universitatis secundum statuta vestra corrigere, & emendare studeant, caritate semper media, secundum quod magis expedire videbitis. Si quis vero subditorum vestrorum statutis vestris contraire præsumpserit aut contempserit observare, eum ecclesiastica sententia percellatis, quam s. sententiam rationabiliter latam à Diocesano Episcopo quam ab aliis inconcussam usque ad condignam cum humilitate & poenitentia satisfactionem præcipimus observari. Decrevimus etiam quod nulli omnino hominum liceat hanc paginam nostræ concessionis, voluntatis exemptionis & libertatis infringere, vel ei aliquatenus contraire. Si quis hoc attemptare præsumpserit, indignationem omnipotentis Dei se noverit incursum.

Ib. p. 256.

JOHANNES Episcopus, servus servorum Dei, dilectis filiis Universitatis Cantabrigiæ Eliensis diocesis salutem & apostolicam benedictionem. Inter singula quæ grata nobis oblectatione lætificant, grandi reficimur gaudio & lætitia exultat optata, cum eos, qui coelesti sunt providentia præditi, ad populorum regimen & regnorum ad communem subjectorum suorum profectum intentos aspicimus, ipsosque ad publicæ utilitatis bonum sollicitos intuemur. Sane carissimus in Christo filius noster Edwardus, Angliæ rex illustris, prudenter attendens, quod multitudo Sapientum salus est regnorum, quodque non minus prudentium consilio quam fortium strenuitate virorum regencium & regnorum moderamina disponuntur, apud Cantabrigiam Elien. Diocesis locum in regno suo multis commoditatibus præditum & insignem desiderat vigere studium generale, & quod à doetoribus & docendis in posterum frequentetur, humiliter postulavit à nobis ut studium ab olim inibi ordinatum & privilegia à Romanis Pontificibus prædecessoribus nostris, vel Regibus Angliæ qui fuerunt pro tempore eidem concessa, apostolico curaremus munimine roborare. Nos igitur suæ intentionis propositum dignis in domino laudibus commendantes, ejusque supplicationibus inclinati, apostolica auctoritate statuimus, ut in prædicto loco Cantabrigiæ sit de cetero studium generale, illudque ibidem vigeat perpetuis futuris temporibus in qualibet facultate, volentes auctoritate prædicta & etiam decernentes quod collegium magistrorum & scholarium ejusdem studii Universitas sit censenda & omnibus juribus gaudeat quibus gaudere potest & debet Universitas quæcunque legitime ordinata. Ceterum omnia privilegia & indulta & prædicto studio rationabiliter à pontificibus & regibus prædictis concessa auctoritate prædicta confirmamus. Nulli ergo omnino homini liceat hanc paginam nostri statuti, voluntatis, constitutionis, & confirmationis infringere, vel in ausu temerario contraire. Si quis autem hoc attemptare præsumpserit, indignationem omnipotentis Dei, & beatorum Petri & Pauli Apostolorum se noverit incursisse.

Jamq. intellexerimus quod licet quamplures in Villa nostra Cantabrigiæ et Suburbis ejusdem commorantes et inhabitantes, Fimum, Terram corruptam, Aquam fætidam, Exitus et Intestina Bestiarum occisarum, Cadavera et alia sordida quamplurima in Viis, Stratis, Fossis, Rivis, Aquis, et aliis Locis infra eandem Villam et Suburbia ejusdem contra Formam Statuti et Ordinationis prædictorum posuerunt et projecerunt, ac in Dies ponere ac projicere non desistunt, in nostri Contemptum et Prejudicium, ac Hominum in dicta

Villa inhabitantium, conversantium et transeuntium, ac illuc advenientium Nocumentum ac Damnum non modicum, ac Gravamen intolerabile, dicta tamen Statutum et Ordinatio tum propter Timorem, tum propter Favorem delinquentium hujusmodi, tum propter multas variasq. et diversas Dilationes Processûs, et Gravitationem Pænæ eorundem Statuti et Ordinationis, debitè executæ minimè existunt. Nos Consideratione præmissorum, ac ob speciales Amorem et Favorem, quos ad Universitatem nostram prædictæ Villæ Cantebrigie gerimus et habemus, ac ad Instantiam et Supplicationem speciales dilecti nobis in Christo Magistri Roberti Woodlarke, Præpositi Collegii nostri regalis B. Mariæ et S. Nicholai de Cantebrigiâ, nunc Cancellarii ejusdem Universitatis nostræ, tamq. ad Incrementum Virtutum ibidem, quam ad Evitationem hujusmodi Nocumentorum, Infectiones Aeris causantium, maximas Infirmitates in Dies ibi generantium; Concessimus et confirmavimus pro nobis et Hæredibus nostris (quantum in nobis est) præfato Cancellario Universitatis nostræ prædictæ, ac Doctoribus, Magistris, et Scholaribus ejusdem Universitatis et Successoribus suis, quod Cancellarius Universitatis prædictæ, pro Tempore existens quicunq. et Successores sui Cancellarii ibidem in perpetuum habeant Authoritatem et Potestatem ad inquirendum, et perscrutandum, examinandum seu probandum singulis Annis, perpetuis futuris Temporibus, quotiens Opus fuerit et necesse, per Sacramentum proborum et legalium Hominum de dicta Villâ et Comitatu Cantebrigie, per quos seu per quem hujusmodi Nocumenta Fimi, Terræ Corruptæ, Aquæ fetidæ, Exituum, Intestinorum, Cadaverum, et aliorum Sordidorum prædictorum in Viis, Stratis, Fossis, Rivis, Aquis et aliis Locis infra Jurisdictionem ejusdem Cancellarii, contra Formam Statuti et Ordinationis prædictæ posita et projecta extiterunt, et qui hujusmodi Nocumenta sic ponere et projicere non desistunt. Necnon de omnibus Obstructuris et Suffocationibus Gutturarum, Cursuum Viarum aquaticarum, et Sewerarum infra eandem Jurisdictionem factis et fiendis,

Et ad amerciandum omnes et singulos, quos per debitam Inquisitionem, Scrutinium Examinationem vel aliam Probationem seu publicam Evidentiam poterint reperiri inde culpabiles, Et ad ponendum omnes et singulos hujusmodi delinquentes totiens quotiens ad Pœnas pecuniarias seu Prisonæ nostræ ibidem committendum et puniendum quousq. hujusmodi Nocumenta emandeverint, amoverint et asportari fecerint secundum Discretionem dicti Cancellarii pro Tempore ibidem existentis, prout singulis hujusmodi delinquentium per eundem Cancellarium injunctum fuerit. Concessimus etiam et confirmavimus præfatis Cancellario, Doctoribus, Magistris et Scholaribus nostræ Universitatis prædictæ et Successoribus suis quod idem Cancellarius ejusdem Universitatis pro Tempore existens, et Successores sui Cancellarii ibidem in perpetuum habeant et percipiant sibi et Successoribus suis omnia et omnimoda Amerciamenta et Pœnas pecuniarias pro præmissis facta et fienda, necnon forisfacta et forisfacienda, si quæ fuerint, absq. aliquo Computo, seu aliquo alio inde nobis vel Hæredibus nostris reddendo, solvendo, vel faciendo. Et Insuper licet Cancellarius Universitatis prædictæ pro Tempore existens habeat ex Concessione inclitorum Progenitorum nostrorum, quondam Regum Angliæ Authoritatem et Potestatem banniendi omnes criminosas et viciosas Personas, obstinaces, rebelles, et incorrigibiles a dicta Universitate et Procinctu ejusdem, Personæ tamèn sic bannitæ ad Villas et Villatas prope dictam Universitatem se retrahunt ibi commorantes, ad hujusmodi Crimina et vitiosam Conversationem detestabiliter magis ibidem quam in Universitate prædicta ducend et exercend. Nos igitur de uberiori Gratiâ nostrâ concessimus et confirmavimus præfatis Cancellario, Doctoribus, Magistris, et Scholaribus ejusdem Universitatis nostræ et Successoribus suis, quod idem Cancellarius pro Tempore existens et Successores sui Cancellarii ibidem in perpetuum habeant Potestatem et Authoritatem banniendi a dicta Universitate per 4 milliaria circumjacentia omnes Pronubas, Meretrices, et Mulieres incontinentes infra eandem Universitatem aut Procinctum ejusdem notabilitèr delinquentes; ita quod nulla hujusmodi Mulier sic bannita infra 4 milliaria circa dictam Universitatem Cantebrigie commorari præsumat. Et si aliqua earum infra 4 milliaria circa Cantebrigiam commoretur, quòd Dominus Loci sive Habitationis alicujus hujusmodi mulieris bannitæ, aut ipsius Domini Deputatus, Super Præmonitione hujusmodi Bannitionis per Cancellarium dictæ Universitatis pro Tempore existentem sibi factâ, dictam bannitam imprisonet, et post hujusmodi Imprisonamentum eam a Dominio illo expellat, et amoveat, dicto Statuto aut quibuscunq. aliis Statutis et Ordinationibus non obstantibus. In Cujus Rei Testimonium has Literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes. Teste Meipso apud Westm. 12<sup>o</sup> Die Ap. An. Reg. nostri 37<sup>o</sup>. Privileged Persons.

Art. 4. That of all such Scholars, Scholer's Servants, & common Ministers of the University as use Merchandize in the Town, only those Servants shall have the Privilege of Scholars Servants, who live with them in their House in the said Town, and not those also who live elsewhere.

Proof of Privilege by Certificate of the V. Chan.

5. That, if any one attached, arrested, or distrained by the Mayor or any other Officer of the Town, within seven Daies bring a Certificate under the Hand of the Chancellor or Vicechancellor that he is a Scholer, he shall be discharg'd immediately.

By Oath of the Party.

6. That, if any Person attached, arrested, or distrained by the Mayor or any other Officer of the Town, will publickly make solemn Oath, that at the Time of such Attachment he was a Scholar's Servant, common Minister of the University, Servant of such common Minister, or Servant of a Scholer's Servant, he shall be discharged immediately without Fees.

Privileged Person, if required, must prove his Privilege in 3 Daies.

7. That, if any Burgess or Dweller in the Town, arrested or distrained before the Commissary or other Officer of the University, alledge, that the Party at whose Suit he is so arrested or distrained, is not a Scholer, Scholer's Servant, common Minister of the University, nor any of their Servants; then Proof shall be made to the contrary within 3 Daies, according to Art 5 & 6; & on Failure thereof the Party so arrested or distrained shall be discharged immediately without fees.

- Art. 8. That if any privileged Person, attached, arrested, or distrained by the Mayor or any Officer of the Town, & discharged as a privileged Person, as aforesaid, do alledge, that the Party, at whose Suit he was prosecuted, knew he was a privileged Person; then that Party shall either make publick Oath, that he did not know this, or else make the Person aggrieved Satisfaction at the Discretion of the Vice-chancellor. Also, if any Burgess or Dweller in the Town, arrested or distrained before the Commissary or other Officer of the University, shall be discharged as aforesaid, Art. 7. Satisfaction shall be made him in like Manner.
- 9. That the Mayor shall have all Pleas of Victuall between Burgess & Burgess, & between Burgess & Foreigner, where the Burgess is Plaintiff: And that the Chancellor shall have all such Pleas between Foreigner & Foreigner & between Foreigner & Burgess when the Foreigner is Plaintiff. By Victualls are here meant such only as are bought or sold to be spent in the University, or Town, or other Places, not such as are for Merchandize.
- 10. That all Pleas of Victual bought to sell by Way of Merchandize shall be before the Mayor, unless where any privileged Person is Party.
- 11. That the University shall have the Punishment & Correction of all Affrays made in the Town or University, & also the Amercements for them according to their old Charters & Grants.
- 12. That any privileged Person committing Murder or Felony shall be attached & arrested, according to the common Law of the Land, as well before his Banishment out of the University as after.
- 13. That the Keepers of the Town Prisons shall keep such Prisoners, as are committed by the Chancellor in convenient & secure Places; & shall take no Fees

And if any Baker or Brewer leave off Trade for 3 Months, & then set up again, his Fine shall be at the Discretion of the Vicechancellor, so it do not exceed 6<sup>s</sup>. 8<sup>d</sup>. Baker's & Brewer's Fee to the Taxors or Proctors.
- 22. That the Mayor & Bailiffs shall have Presentment, Punishment, Correction, and Reformation of all common Annoyances in the Town at their Leets, to be held within 6 Weeks after Mich<sup>s</sup>. and Easter. But upon their Negligence at any Time, the Chancellor shall for that Time have the Punishment, Correction, & Amercements of all that make such Annoyance, & see the Correction thereof. Annoyances.
- 23. That all Seges made over the common Ditches of the Town shall be removed, except the common Sege of the Town, which shall by the Mayor be cleansed every third Year, so as to be as little Annoyance as possible. By Seges.
- 24. That the Mayor, Bailiffs, and Burgesses, shall take Care, that no Butcher kill any Beast in any Street of the Town, & that they convey away the Gutts, Paunches, Filth, & Entrails of their Beasts in such Manner, that they be no Annoyance to the University or Town. By Butchers.
- 25. That the Mayor, Bailiffs, & Burgesses shall have the sole Search and Correction of Leather, & the Forfeitures & Amercements of the same, paying yearly to the University 3<sup>s</sup>. 4<sup>d</sup>. And that the Mayor shall swear all Persons appointed to search Leather, to make true Search, & certify their Names to the Vicechancellor, before whom they shall make like Oath. Search of Leather.

Search of Sackcloth.

Art. 26. That the University meddle not with the Search of Sackcloth.

Taxes.

27. That all Taxes & Subsidies to the King that shall happen in the Town, except the Fee Farm of the same, shall be assessed upon Oath by 8 Burgesses & 4 privileged Persons, such as shall be contributory to the same, after the Rate of their Lands, Tenements, Goods, & Chattells. The Assessment to be made by a major Part of the Number, whereof 2, at least, to be privileged Persons.

Taxes.

The Assessments of privileged Persons to be collected by a Beadle, & paid to the Mayor.

Privileged Persons.

28. That several Persons here named shall be allowed the Privilege of Scholars, so long as they shall be so taken by the University, any of the foregoing Articles notwithstanding.

Decision of
Articles.

29. That any Doubt or Ambiguity in these Articles shall be interpreted by the Lady Margaret Countess of Richmond & Derby, or by such Persons as she shall appoint. And after her Decease, by the Chancellor & Treasurer of England, & the Cheif Justice of the Kings Bench, & of the Common Pleas for the Time being or any three or two of them.

Decision of all future Contests for Privileges.

30. That all future Controversies that may arise between the Town & University about Privileges shall be decided as in the last Article.

the Town against the University An. 1524.*

— GEORGE Foyster, late Mayor of the Town, was excommunicated by one Dr. Crooke, being the Vicechancellor's Deputy; & before he could be assoyled again, was not only enjoyned by the said Doctor to hold a Taper of Wax in his Hand, & kneeling openly in the Augustine Fryers Church before the Image of our Lady, there offered his said Candle as a Penitent; but also he was compelled & constreyn'd by the said Dr. Crooke & one Dr. Hall to make a Submission, (which before they had conceyved & devised in Writinge) commanding the said Foyster to say the same after them, the Tenor of which Submission hereafter followeth.

‘ For the Offence that I have committed against the University, in maintaining the Jurisdiction of my Mairealty ‘ against the Liberties of the University, & refusing to come
‘ at the call of you, Mr. Vicechancellor, contrarie to mine ‘ Othe, & mine Obedience, in this behalfe, I acknowledge ‘ myself giltie, & desire of you Absolution,’ &c. As more plainly & at large may appear in a publique Instrument thereupon made & hanged up in the common Scholes of the University, for a Note & President to all Straungers thether comminge, in perpetuall Reproach of the Offyce of Maire●lity of the said Towne.

A Letter from the Privy Council, ordering that the Mayor & Sherriff acknowledge their Offences committed against the Proctors in Sturbridge Fair.

AFTER our Right hearty Commendations, these shall be to advertise you, that upon the Occasion of such Matter of Complaint, as on your Behalf hath been exhibited unto us against the Mayor of the Town & the Undersherriff of that Countie. Wee have heard them at good Length, & in the End find them sorry for their Attempts, & very willing to do, that should be by us appointed for Redubbe thereof. Whereupon we have taken Order, that both the said Mayor & Undersherriff shall not only knowledge their Faults before you the Vicechancellor & six or seven others of the Heads of your Colleges & the two Proctors, but also that the Mayor in the common Hall shall openly among his Bretheren acknowledge his wilfull proceeding; and exhort them all, as much as in him lieth, to beware of the like hereafter: the doing whereof like as we thought should give a good Example to others, not to attempt the breaking of any of your Liberties hereafter; whereby, according to your own Information, ye may the more quietly apply your Learning, so we doubt not but you will conform yourselves indeed, & not only at such Times as these, Men shall come to knowledge their Faults use such quiet, sober, & gentle Entertainment of them as shall become Men of your Callings, but also in the diligent applying of your Learning, & the Rest of your Proceedings so to use yourselves, that these the King's Majestie's Grants may take their intended Effect

among you: In which Case we shall not only think this our Travell well employed, but also to be glad to aid you further from Time to Time as Occasion shall so require accordingly; & thus fare you well heartily. From Hampton Court, the 34. of Octo<sup>b</sup>. 1547.

This is the Order & Decree which was taken by the King's Majestie's Privy Council the 3<sup>d</sup>. Day of Octo<sup>b</sup>. 1547, & to be spoken before the University by James Fletcher, late Mayor of the Town of Cambridge.

WHEREAS certain Prisoners taken by the Proctors of the University in this last Sturbridge Fair, for Persons of naughty & corrupt Behaviour, were by the same Proctors brought to the Tolboth, to have been there committed to Prison, both for their Punishment & also the Example of others. And I having before taken the Keys of the Prison into my Custody, would not suffer the said Malefactors to be taken into Prison; whereupon I have been called before my Lords & others of the King's Majestie's privy Council, & my Fault therein so justly & plainly opened unto me, as I could not deny the same: like as then before my said Lords I did sincerely & wittingly confess my said Fault; so now by their Order I confess before you all, that in Refusal to accept the said Prisoners I did unwisely & indiscreetly, both to the Danger of myself, if the matter should be extreamly construed, & also to the evill Example of the Rest of the Townsmen, whereby they might take Courage to do the like least they fall into like Danger, but to do rather all Things, that may breed a Quietness between you & us.

W. Honing Clericus, privati Consil. Dñi Regis.

The Effect of this was the Undersheriff of Cambridge-shire appointed to pronounce before the Vicechancellor changing only his Fault of the bayling the Prisoners from the Castle.

BY THE QUEEN.

A. N. D. 1561.

THE Queen's Majesty, considering how the Pallaces & Houses as well of Cathedrall Churches as of Colleges of this Realm, have been both of auntient & late Time biled & enclosed in Severalty to sustain & keep Societies of learned Men professing Study & Prayer for the Edification of the Church of God, & so consequently to serve the Commonwealth. And understanding of late, that within certain of the same Houses as well the cheif Governors, as the Prebendaries, Students, & Members thereof being married, do keep particular Households with their Wives, Children, & Nurses, whereof no small Offence groweth to the Intent of the Founders, & to the quiet & orderly Profession of Study & Learning within the same. Her Majesty therefore hath thought meet to provide Remedy herein, least by Sufferance thereof, the Rest of the Colleges, specially such as be so replenished with young Students as the very Rooms & Buildings be not answerable for such Families & young Children, should follow the like Example. And therefore expressly willoth & commandeth, that no Manner of Person being either the Head or Member of any College, or Cathedrall Church within this Realm, shall from the Time of the Notification hereof in the same College have, or be permitted to have within the Precincts of any such College his Wife or other Woman to abide & dwell in the same, or to frequent & haunt any Lodgings within the same College, upon Pain, that whosoever shall do the contrary shall forfeit all ecclesiasticall Promotions in any Cathedrall or Collegiate Church or College within this Realm. And for Continuance of this Order, her Majesty willeth, that the Transcript hereof shall be reputed as Parcell of the Statutes of the same, & so observed.

Given under our Signett at our Town of Ipswich, the 9th. Day of August in the 3<sup>d</sup>. Year of our Reign.

An Opinion of the two cheif Justices, touching the Nomination of Vintners, & settling of Prices upon Wines in the University, declared upon Occasion of Suit commenced against the University by Mr. Walter Rawleigh.

FIRST touching the Nomination of Vintners there. We think it pertaineth to the University by Usage, & Charters from her Majesty confirmed by Parliament, & that Mr. Rawleigh can nominate none there.

For the Price: It seemeth they may set Prices, so as it be according to the Statutes, & not otherwise: So as, if the Vintners sell at higher Prices, they are to be punish'd by Law, which Penalty Mr. Rawleigh may dispencc withall; & yet cannot sue for the Penaltie by his Grant against the Statute Laws; for therein all Liberties of the University are excepted.

An Order of the Lords of the Privy Council An. 1612.

Chesterton within the limits of the Univer.

Forasmuch as Learning hath anciently had this special Favour & Privilege, that upon any Occasion of Grievance or Complaint offer'd unto the two Universities of this Realm, whensoever they have made their immediate Recourse to the King or his Council for speedy Redress & for avoiding Length and Charges of Suit in an ordinary legall Proceeding of Justice, they have never been refused, but always graciously accepted. And whereas at this Time the V. Chancellor, Masters, & Scholers of the University of Cambridge, concerning some Injury & Violence to be done unto their Privileges & Liberties by one Jo<sup>n</sup>. Batisford Esq. & others, have humbly addressed themselves to us the Lords & others of his Majesties Privy Council to be therein relieved; & by their learned Council have this Day inform'd us, that having Power & Authority by Virtue of divers Charters from the Kings & Queens of this Land, his Majesties Predecessors, confirmed in like Manner by his Majesty himself, to search as well by Day as by Night in all Places within their Liberties for Vagabonds & other disorderly & suspected Persons, & to punish such Persons being found according to the Laws in those Cases provided. And that their Proctors having accordingly made search the 6th Day of Septem<sup>r</sup>. last in Chesterton a Village near Cambridge, & within the Liberties of the University (as was alledged); & there apprehending divers Persons of lewd Conversation in the House of one Margaret Higford, committed them afterward to the Goal; some of the said disorder'd Persons complaining with the before-named John Batisford of Chesterton Esqr. & others upon Pretence that the University had no Jurisdiction within that Village, & that the Proctors, who made the Search, had therefore committed a Riot, did thereupon presume to prefer a Bill of Indictment against the said Proctors & their Company the last Quarter Sessions held 1<sup>mo</sup>. Octobris for the County of Cambridge, which by the Grand Jury was found Billa Vera, only upon the said Pretence that the University had no Jurisdiction within that place, which was openly affirmed by way of Information to the Jury by Mr. Batisford then sitting upon the Bench, & one Story, Constable of that Hundred: unto which complaint the said Batisford being present at the Board, & required to make Answer, denied some Circumstances, as they were delivered, but for the Matter confessed the substance, as namely, that the disorder'd Persons before mention'd were by him bound over in a Recognizance to prosecute the said pretended Riot against the said University at the Quarter Sessions following; & here again insisted & maintained, that the Jurisdiction of the University did not extend to the Village of Chesterton, which his learned Council did much labour to prove.

We thereupon entering into a due Consideration of what had been alledged, as well on the one Side as on the other, & having perused that Article of their Charter, which concerneth the Extent of their Jurisdiction, whereby it appeareth that the same reacheth an English Mile undequaq. ab extimis Villæ Ædificiis, & it being on all sides agreed upon, that the said Village of Chesterton is within the said Distance; It was therefore by us decreed & adjudged, that the said Village of Chesterton is within the Jurisdiction of the said University of Cambridge; & that the Act of the Proctors in making Search there as aforesaid was lawfull; & in that Respect they & their Company unlawfully molested for so doing; for which Consideration it was accordingly order'd, that his Majesty's Attorney General should presently take a Course for the Stay of all Proceedings upon or by Colour of the said Judgment: and the said Mr. Batisford likewise admonish'd to carry himself hereafter towards the said University with more Respect, & to abstain seeking Quarrel or contention with a Body which hath ever found Love & Favour; & may justly challenge it from all Persons of liberal & ingenuous Condition.

cellor.

Furthermore, whereas the said V. Chancellor, Masters, & Scholers of the University of Cambridge being zealous as well of the Honour as of the Jurisdiction of their University have in like manner complained unto us, that one Tho. Smart late Mayor of the Town of Cambridge did, at a Quarter Sessions lately holden in the Guildhall of the said Town, where both he & Mr. Dr. Goche V. Chancellor were to sit as Justices of the Peace, contend with the said V. Chancellor for Precedency of Place, notwithstanding the Example of almost 200 Years to the contrary, & a Judgment given by the late Earl of Essex, Earl Marshall, now of Record, & also his Majesties express Pleasure signified unto the Lord Chancellor, that as well in all Commissions as at any Meetings the said V. Chancellor should take Place of the Mayor of the said Town.

We for these Considerations & finding not any thing alledged to the contrary of Weight or Force sufficient, have declared & order'd, that the said V. Chancellor ought & is to take chief Place and Precedency of the Mayor at all Times and in all Places whatsoever, and that the Attempt of the said Mayor was an Injury and Disgrace offer'd to the University, whereof they had just Cause to complain. Given at his Majesties Palace at Westm<sup>r</sup>. the 20th day of Octob<sup>r</sup>. 1612 and in the 10th Year of his Majesties Reign.

The Lords assembled in Parliament having taken into consideration the difference about Precedency of place between the V. Chan. of the University of Camb. & the Mayor of the town of Cambridge; & having heard Council, Witnesses, & Proofs on both sides, at this Barr, do after debate & mature deliberation decree, order, & adjudge, that the Precedency of place of right belongeth to the V. Chancellor of Camb. before the Mayor of the town of Camb.;

& do order that the said Precedency be enjoyed by the said V. Chan. & his Successors without any let or disturbance by the said Mayor or his Successors. And likewise it is hereby order'd that the Deed engross'd for the conveying of lands purchased with the 200lb. which Mr. Thompson gave by his last Will & Testament, to be employed in the Workhouse, for the setting the poor in Cambridge on work at the discretion of the V. Chan. & Mayor (wherein the said Mayor of the town of Camb. caused his name to be written before the V. Chan'. name in the said Deed) be cancelled, & forthwith made void: & that the said Mayor, upon the sight of this order, cause a new Deed to be made, wherein the V. Chan'. name shall be first placed, as of Right it ought: that so things in reference to the Workhouse in Camb. may be executed jointly by the V. Chan. & Mayor according to the tenor of the Will, and the intent of the Donor.

controversy between the University of Camb. & certain Burgers of the Town, concerning the rating & setting the price of Victualia, and particularly of candles, and other necessities comprised under the term of Focalia; and of the consequences lately fallen out upon that controversy: which having been long debated by Council learned on both sides; his Majesty finally ordered by Advice of the Board, that as well the late Mayor & Bailiff, & W<sup>m</sup>. Bridge, as Edward Almond, John Ball, Jonas Scott, & Tho. Oliver shall acknowledge & submit themselves, by setting their hands to this order in the Council Book, to the jurisdiction & privileges of the University, as well for the rating and setting a price of all kind of Victuals & of Candles, & all other necessities comprehended under the term of Focalia; as for the correcting & punishing of all such inhabitants of the town, as shall break and exceed the said rate and prices, so set by the V. Chan. or such Officers of the University, as are in that behalf authorized.

About setting the price of Victualia, of candles in particular.

And it is further order'd, that all the parties, fined by the V. Chancellor, shall pay the fines; & such charges of the court, as was set upon them by the V. Whereas M<sup>r</sup>. Bedell, according to the Statute in that behalf, he was refused admission by D<sup>r</sup>. Baldero, their V. Chan. & therefore praying releif; his Majesty was graciously pleased, by Order of the 17th. of Nov. last past, to summon the said D<sup>r</sup>. Baldero, & all other partys concerned, to appear, & set forth the merits of the said cause before the Board: And the partys accordingly meeting with councill learned on either side, it appeared that, upon the decease of the said Francis Hughes, two persons were nominated by the V. Chan. & other the heads of Houses, who being proposed to the congregation, that one of them M<sup>r</sup>. John Peck, Fellow of St. John's College, had more votes than the other; & was consequently admitted into the Esq<sup>r</sup>. Bedells place. And notwithstanding it was alledged, that the petitioner, M<sup>r</sup>. Worts, had many more voices in the Congregation than any of the others; yet having not been nominated to the said place by the Heads of Houses, according to the antient custom, & constant usage ever since the making the statute in this behalf; his Majesty was pleased to declare his Election void. And for the final settlement of this & the like Elections in the future; he was pleased to order, & it is hereby order'd accordingly, that the nomination of the persons for the Esq<sup>r</sup>. The Election of firmed.

Upon reading this day at the board a Report from the Lords of the Committee of his Majesty's most honourable P. Councill, dated the 16th. of this Instant, in the words following, viz.

In obedience to your Majestie's Orders in Councill of the 19th. of last month, referring unto this Committee, the humble petition of the several Heads of Colleges, Doctors, & Masters of the University of Camb., whose names are thereto subscribed; & likewise the humble petition of Jo<sup>r</sup>. Bacon, of Camb. in the county of Camb.

Their Lordships this day took the said petitions into consideration, which set forth, that on Wednesday the 12th. of June last the said Jo<sup>n</sup>. Bacon was duly chosen a Vintner for the said University of Camb. by a majority of legall & statutable votes; but that notwithstanding the said choice, Dr. Lambert the V. Chan. had ordered Tho. Whitstones to be declared duly elected vintner of the said University, to the manifest prejudice of the rights & privileges of the members of the said University: & therefore they prayed such releif in the premises, as to your Majesty's royall justice & wisdom should seem meet. And their Lordships, having thereupon heard the petitioners by their councill learned in the Law, & also councill in behalf of Dr. Lambert the V. Chan., & the said Tho. Whitstones: & having consider'd of the several Statutes & Graces made by the said University of Cambridge, for the better regulating of Elections in the said University, do find that in the year 1698, the following Grace was unanimously made by that University, viz. cum ortu aspi-pius ob controversum suffragiorum jus, &c.

And it being admitted on both sides, that if the said Grace was to be regarded as valid, & ought to have been observed at the said Election of a Vintner, the Majority of votes would fall upon M<sup>r</sup>. Bacon; their Lordships proceeded to a particular consideration of the said Grace: & upon hearing what was alledged on all sides, their Lordships do agree, humbly to report, as their opinion, that the said Grace is very just & reasonable, & ought to have been regarded as good & valid; & that the said V. Chan. pursuant thereto, ought to have order'd the said Jo<sup>n</sup>. Bacon to be declared duly elected; & to have affixed the University seal to the appointment of the said Jo<sup>n</sup>. Bacon, to be a vintner of the said University in such manner as is usuall on the like occasions.

CHARTERS, BULLS, &amp;c.

His Majesty in Council, taking the said report into consideration, was pleased to approve & confirm the same; & to order, as it is hereby order'd, that D<sup>r</sup>. Lambert V. Chan. of the University of Camb. do cause the said Jo<sup>a</sup>. Bacon to be declared duly elected vintner of the said University, & the University seal to be affixed to an appointment of the said Jo<sup>a</sup>. Bacon, to be vintner of the said University in such manner as hath been usuall on the like occasions.

THE BLACK PARCHMENT BOOK.

IN THE V. CHAN'S. CUSTODY.

THIS book, tho very confused, was of great use before Mr. Hare made his collection; & stil 'tis valuable for some things not so easie to be met with elsewhere. The most useless part of it, & which is indeed ridiculous, I mean the Historiola or fable of King Gurguntius, is said to be written by one Nic. Cantelupe, Prior of Northampton, about the year 1440; & inserted into this book by Willm Buchenham, M<sup>r</sup>. of Gonvill & Caius, & V. Chan. A. D. 1509.

CAP. XLV.

NULLUS concionator sit, vel aliquam concionem pro gradu suo habeat, nisi ad minimum diaconus sit. Octavâ Maii ad Henrici septimi commendationem sacra concio sit, quam Regius in Theologiâ Professor faciat. Pridiè uniuscujusq. termini concio latina horâ nonâ antemeridianâ in ecclesia beatæ Mariæ habeatur. Primo termino anni concionabitur Regius Professor in Theologiâ; secundo Professor dominæ Margaretæ; tertio concionator Academiæ. Unoquoq. die dominico de anno in annum conciones in Academiæ templo fiant: ordo idem collegiorum in concionibus observabitur, quem in disputationibus præscripsimus; incipiendo a senioribus, qui concionatores sunt in unaquâq. combinatione, et sic progrediendo ad juniorem. Qui cursum suum in concionando omiserit * viginti solidis mulctabitur.

CAP. XLVI.

STATUIMUS, ut nemo ad aliquem in Universitate gradum evectus, nisi togâ talari, caputioq. ordini congruente, aut ad minimum insigni circa collum sacerdotali indutus collegio exeat: contra delinquentis sex solidi et octo denarii mulcta sit. Et si quispiam disputationi publicæ in suâ facultate, publicis in ecclesiâ beatæ Mariæ precibus, concioni ad Clerum, sepulturis, congregationibus, sine togâ, habitu, et caputio gradui suo convenientibus, juxta antiquum Academiæ morem, interfuerit, eandem mulctam incurrat. Item statuimus, ut Socii cujusq. Collegii, et Graduati qui non sunt Socii, dum moram traxerint in Universitate, superiore pileo scholastico et quadrato, nisi ægrotaverint, utantur, et non alio, tam in collegio quàm extra collegium, sub pænâ prædictâ. Prohibemus etiam, ne quis scholarium cujusq. conditionis sit, galero utatur, aut in collegio aliquo, aut extra collegium, nisi ægrotaverit, sub eadem pœna quotiès deliquerit.

Volamus etiam, ne quisquam, studiorum nomine degens in Academiâ, ultra unam virgam et dimidiatam panni in exteriore parte caligarum gestare præsumat; neve caligis fenestratis, conscissis, serico contextis, aliquo modo distentis, et suffarcinatis incedat, sub pœna sex solidorum et octo denariorum quoties deliquerit.

Præterea volumus, ne quisquam aliquo collegii stipendio sustentatus, aut ad aliquod beneficium ecclesiasticum admissus Camisiâ, rugato collari, aut ad manus rugatis plicaturis, sub pœnâ prædictâ utatur. Licebit tamen mediocri collari rugato uti, modo nihil ex serico intexatur: priviso tamèn ne superiores de vestitu ordinationes, Dominorum liberos, aut Militum hæredes aliquo modo astringant. Socii, Discipuli, et Pensionarii singulis dominicis et festis diebus in Chorum honesto cum apparatu et superpelliciis tecti veniant; Graduati autem cum caputiis gradui suo convenientibus sub pœna duodecim denariorum. Quod si quis a collegii Magistro requisitus Chorum ingredi cum superpellicio et caputio neglexerit, vel recusaverit tempore publicarum precum, pro prima vice commeatu unius septimanæ, pro secunda vice duarum, pro tertia mensis mulctabitur, pro quartâ collegio privabitur: neq. ullum librum secum afferat, qui non vel Scripturæ pars sit, vel ad Scientiam Scripturæ pertineat.

3. Singulis profestis diebus conveniant omnes Socii et Scholares ad horam quintam antemeridianam, et ibi preces matutinas reverentè et religiosè celebrent.

4. Post communes in aurorâ ad horam quintam preces, Locus communis in collegiis Regis, Trin. et Johan. tractabitur, et in cæteris collegiis idem Locus communis bis ad minimum in hebdomadâ eâdem horâ tractabitur.

5. Singuli collegiorum socii et Pensionarii, qui supra gradum Baccalaureatûs Artium et infra Doctoratûs gradum in aliqua Facultate fuerint, Locum communem suo ordine tractabunt per hebdomadas, a senioribus incipiendo, atq. ita ad infimos progrediendo; quod, qui in cursu suo non fecerint, menstruo Commeatu mulctentur.

6. Socii, Discipuli, Pensionarii, et Scholastici singuli, qui nondum quadragessimum annum attigerint, neq. ad

Doctoratus gradum aspirarunt, neq. Præfecti. collegiorum sunt, matutinis horâ quintâ precibus, et Loco communi intererunt sub pæna ea quæ instatutis adversus eos constituta est, qui in divino Servitio (ut vocant) non intersint: in quibus collegiis nulla pæna constituta est, absentes pro singulis absentiiis singuli duobus denariis mulctentur.

9. Problemata Theologica observentur tam per Baccalaureos Theologiæ quoscunq. quàm per Magistros Artium; et Decanus constituatur, qui Moderator sit, et quæstiones determinet, et mercedem certam a Collegio ad id propositam habeat.

10. Pensionarii qui in Sociorum commeatu sunt, problemata, Locos communes, cæterasq. Exercitationes scholasticas, quemadmodum et Socii, observent, sub pænâ menstrui Commeatûs.

11. Magistri Artium post primum ad minimum Regentiæ suæ annum domi suæ in Theologiâ disputent et respondeant.

14. Singuli qui in ullo collegio ad studium Theologiæ Juris et Medicinæ traducti sunt, ordine suo in Theologiâ, Jure et Medicinâ disputare teneantur.

15. In singulis collegiis Lectores, aut alii ad id assignati, Lectiones domesticas examinent, atq. etiam, si commodè fieri poterit, publicas, sub pæna 12<sup>d</sup>. quoties deliquerint.

16. Tutores Pupillos suos diligenter doceant, convenienter corrigant, nec permittant eos solutè in oppido vagari.

17. Lectiones domesticæ ita instituantur ut nullum impedimentum publicis Professorum lectionibus afferant.

18. Singuli collegiorum Præfecti curabunt, ut in ædibus suis singuli scriptores scholastici suâ propriâ et primâ linguâ legantur et cognoscantur.

19. Nemo Scholaris in ullum collegium admittatur, nisi quantum decimum annum adimpleverit, nec quisquam ad ullum collegium assumatur, nisi instructus et præparatus fuerit ad Dialecticam discendam.

20. In singulis collegiis Magister, Decanus, et Lector publicus singulos in collegium admittendos, ante primum illorum ingressum examinent, utrum perfectè teneant Grammaticam necne; ut nulli in hujusmodi loca admittantur, qui non in eâ satis ad Mathematicam et Dialecticam discendam profecerint.

21. Nemo in collegio ullo Grammaticam doceat, nisi in collegiis Trinitatis et Regio quoad Choristas.

22. Cæremoniæ saliendi recentes Scholasticos prorsus aboleantur propter multas incommoditates, quæ ex illis consequuntur; modicæ tamen impensæ possunt in conviviiis retineri.

23. Nemo in aliquod collegium Theologorum admittatur Socius, nisi sit actualis Baccalaureus Artium.

24. Quicumq. alterum parentem Anglum habent, licet in locis transmarinis, sumantur tanquam nati in illo Comitatu, in quo parens Anglus procreatus fuit. Quod si uterq. parens Anglus extiterit, ex illo comitatu esse censeantur, ex quo patrem illorum fuisse constiterit.

25. 26. Singulorum collegiorum Præsides, qui habiles sunt, et libentèr ad concionandum accedunt, sacerdotium ad quadraginta marcarum valorem annuum habere possunt, et ad triam annorum spatium sodalitium suum retinere; modo singulis annis concionem unam in collegio suo, et alteram in Academiâ habeant.

27. In Sociorum et Discipulorum electionibus pauperum filii apti et ingeniosi divitum et potentiorum filiis præferantur.

28. Jentaculorum et prandiorum consueti in disputationum tempore sumptus per Magistrum et majorem partem Sociorum leventur et minuantur.

29. In omnibus et singulis electionibus tam Sociorum, Discipulorum, Scholarium, Officiariorum, Lectorum, reliquorumq. membrorum cujusq. Collegii, quàm in omnibus et singulis locationibus et concessionibus quibuscunq. necessario requirendus est Magistri sive Præpositi illius collegii assensus et consensus. Et quod bene licebit Magistris sive Præpositis collegiorum in suis collegiis, si quando illis necessarium videbitur, omnes illas pænas exercere in delinquentes, quas aliquis Officiariorum illius collegii per statuta ejusdem collegii imponere possit.

30. Si quisquam collegio vel domo suâ abfuerit, ex quacunq. causâ non licebit illi vocem et suffragium suum aliis committere in ullo genere electionis.

31. Lectores et cæteri ejusdem Collegii, si simul rure tempore pestis sunt, ut lectiones cæterasq. exercitationes consuetas quemadmodum si domi essent, habeant, omnes commoditates et fructus percipiant, quos haberent, si domi essent.

32. Nullus Seneschallus, Bursarius, aut hujusmodi aliquis administer, plus pecuniæ præ manibus habeat, quam ad unius mensis provisionem satis pro illo collegio sit.

33. Socios collegiorum maritos esse non permittimus, sed statim postquam quis uxorem duxerit Socius collegii designat esse: ordinem tamen gradûs sui in Academiâ tenere potest.

35. Omnes concessionες quæ communi sigillo sive Academiæ sive ullius collegii obsignantur in Registro prius scribantur, et ante obsignationem cum Registro conferantur.

36. Nullus in festo Nativitatis sit Dominus ludorum quocunq. nomine censeatur, absq. consensu Cancellarii et Præfectorum collegiorum.

37. Convivia antiquis exequiis adjuncta abrogata sunt; et in illorum loco moderatæ epulæ commendationum diebus Magistri et Sociorum judicio instruantur; omnisq. Let us pray.

O Lord, we glorify thee in these thy servants our Benefactors, departed out of this present Life; beseeching thee that as they for their time bestowed charitably for our comfort the temporall things which thou didst give them, so we for our time may fruitfully use the same, to the setting forth of thy holy word, thy Laud, & praise, & finally, that both they & we may reign with thee in glory, thrô Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

40. Mulctæ in his Statutis præscriptæ, nisi aliter iisdem statutis cautum sit, in tres partes dividantur; quarum una in Academiæ, altera in Procuratorum, tertia in Præconum usus convertatur.

42. Statuta omnia, Compositiones, et consuetudines, quæ Scripturis sacris, institutis nostris, aut istis statutis adversari videbuntur, abrogata et recissa sunt, reliquis suo robore permansuris.

43. Si quid dubii vel ambigui in istis statutis et sanctionibus nostris oriatur, id per Cancellarium et majorem partem Præfectorum collegiorum explicabitur et determinabitur, quorum determinationi et interpretationi reliquos omnes cedere volumus.

44. Statutorum horum exempla quatuor sint; unum in communi ærario repositum, alterum apud Cancellarium, duo Procuratores habeant.

FINIS.

SENATUSCONSULTA SIVE GRATIÆ.

AN.

1522. 1. QUONIAM plerumq. periclitata est respublica nostra defectu literarum, quæ ad magnatum implorandam contra adversarios nostros opem, veluti præsidia tutissima ipsis opponi debuissent; detrectantibus laborem singulis, partim præmii exiguitate, partim veriti auctoritatem potentiamq. eorum, contra quos scribere debuissent: visum nobis tandem est, laboranti hac in parte Parenti Academiae, veluti piis filiis succurrendum. Et ne adversarii cum ipsis expostulare possint, qui (quod debent) gymnasii causam pro viribus tutantur; statuimus, ordinamus, et volumus, ut unus aliquis Orator publicus eligatur, cujus humeris quæ incumbunt onera, his capitalis colligenda duximus. Quorum singula ne detrectet, sed fideliter exequatur, juramento illum astringi sub ipsâ mox admissione volumus, et statuimus.

ejus officio.

Primò, ante omnia jurabit Orator, se contra quoscunq. (vel amicos etiam suos) et pro quibuscunq. (inimicis etiam suis) si Cancellario et Procuratoribus videatur, Academiae nomine literas fidelitèr exaraturum; et, si quid in literis publicè

AN.

lectis displiceat, commutaturum, pro arbitrio eorum, quibus committet Auctoritatem expendendi quæ scripta sunt Academia; deinde correctas in mundo descripturum, et ad sigillum aptas redditurum.

Secundò. Et quoniam pleraq. incidunt in negotiis publicis, quæ coram Vicecancellario tractantur, quæ nonnunquam opem aut Regis aut magnatum desiderant; jurabit idem, citra ullam Excusationem, si vocetur, diligentè et fidelitè Vicecancellario et Procuratoribus affuturum; aut alterum, si ipse adesse nequeat, substititutum.

Tertiò. Item, quoniam civile magis munus est quàm theologicum, Principes et magnates in os laudare, et eorum adventum oratione demonstrativâ excipere; statuimus, ut Orator excipiat Principes et magnates omnes oratione doctâ et elaboratâ; et ne cum hac re, nisi annuentibus singulis, et ipso etiam Oratore consentiente, dispensari possit, ordinamus, et statuimus.

Quartò. Si aut priorum negotiorum, aut amicorum invisendorum causâ plusquàm biduum aut triduum abesse illi opus fuerit, unum aliquem idoneum in vicem suam coram Procancellario et Procuratoribus substituet; qui ejus officium juratus suppleat, citra Academiæ aut sumptus aut jacturam. Præterea jurabit, si visum fuerit Academiæ, non recusaturum ad quoscunq. Principes et magnates ire; et apud ipsos contra quoscunq. causas Academiæ fidelitè agere; sic ut ipsi duorum equorum, ministriq. et suos sumptus Academia præstet.

Quintò, et postremò. Jurabit ad quemcunq. statum pervenerit, modis omnibus, pro viribus, Academiæ causas contra quoslibet adjuturum et protecturum. Et si vel amicum vel inimicum, vel alium quemlibet intelligat aliquid contra Academiam moliri, id mox Academiæ Procancellario et Procuratoribus, quamprimum commodè fieri poterit, insinuabit, et consilio juvabit, quo ipsi videtur, siquid immineat periculi, illud posse Academiam declinare. Item statuimus, si Magister Artium sit, ut habitum habeat non ex alia qualibet re, quam ex serico et undulatâ.

AN.

Quod si in his omnibus, aut horum aliquo quoquo modo peccasse legitimè et probabiliter convincatur; volumus, ut per Procancellarium, et Majorem partem Doctorum, ut illis videbitur justum, puniatur. Quod si secundo peccaverit, officio suspendatur, donec patribus Academiæ visus fuerit dignam criminis dedisse pœnam: quod si tertio, prorsus et citra ullam restitutionem removeatur. Pœnæ Oratoris.

Jam quia tot laboribus obnoxium, iniquum esset momentaneo afficere præmio; statuimus et ordinamus, ut quilibet post Doctorem Crocum futurus Orator, tantum per septennium officio gaudeat, idq. si hic perstiterit. Deinde, quia publicæ libertatis velut assertor, et propugnator literis suis vir talis futurus est; et talem æquum est honorificè haberi: Statuimus, et volumus, ut Orator, si M'. Artium sit, habeat locum et honorem omnino summus, et proximos post Legum et Medicinæ Doctores; ita tamen, ut in Processionibus solus incedat, et in publicis Actibus sedeat, honoris gratia, separatus ab aliis. Privilegia Oratoris.

Item statuimus, quod omnibus publicis negotiis et consiliis, etiam non vocatus, pro arbitrio suo interesse possit; et suam de rebus omnibus, quemadmodum Doctores, dicere sententiam.

Tertio, quoniam multorum indignationi Academiae nomine videtur exponendus, et pluribus negotiis nonnunquam involvendus, quam ut citra publicum incommodum Academiae negotiis semper omnibus interesse possit; eundem ab omnibus Missis, Exequiis, et Congregationibus (etiam ex statuto) fore liberum, et ad placitum Regentem et non-Regentem esse statuimus.

Postremo, ne jacturam faciat absens in suis negotiis, cum obstrictus sit aliquem unum coram Procancellario et Procuratoribus (quod sine sumptu non potest) in suum sufficere locum: Statuimus, ut annis singulis ipsi 40 solidi numerentur ex aërio publico, per Procuratores eidem petenti sine ullâ dilatione dandi; viginti scilicet in die vesperiarum; et viginti in die Nativitatis Domini. Proviso semper, ut uni Domino Croco perpetuum hoc Officium sit, quamdiù placuerit hîc sedem habere permanentem: quod si alio se contulerit, illic permansurus, quia primus invexit literas ad nos Græcas, et quia Regi charus est, cujus nomine a præcipuis Magnatibus arctè nobis est commendatus, volumus ut ubiq. et semper omnibus suis privilegiis gaudeat; et, si redierit, locum cum Oratore, sed superiorem, servet et teneat. Ita tamen, ut Orator, qui pro tempore fuerit, officium servet suum, et suis quoq. privilegiis gaudeat, perinde ac Crocus non interesset.

Eligantur autem singuli post Dominum Crocum futuri Oratores in hunc modum. Infra tridium, si fieri potest, postquam vacaverit officium, convocetur plena Regentium et non-Regentium congregatio, in quâ per majorem partem præsen-

De Disputationibus A. M.

Statuimus etiam, ut nemo Regens alicujus Collegii, vel Aulæ, vel Hospitii per alios quam per sui proprii collegii Regentes unquam disputet, nisi consulto priùs et assentiente suæ Domus Præposito, vel ejus vices gerente.

Ad hæc statuimus, ut nullus Regentium dispu-

Numerum autem disputationum sic decernimus: quod nullus Regentium sæpius quàm bis in uno et eodem Termino, aut suâ, aut alterius vice publicis sese exercent disputationibus: neq. id quidem cuiquam licere volumus, nisi ut prædictum est, alicujus collegii cætu ex more honestè concomitato.

These Syndicks were appointed by a Grace
Jan. 30, 1683.

Juramentum
hoc isti, quod Gradibus com-petit, ascrip-tum erat per
19<sup>o</sup>. 1696.

2<sup>dy</sup>. That no person, except such as are present members of the Senate, or shall be at the next Commencement, or except such as are actually Batchelors of Law or Physick, or shall be at the Commencement, be admitted to the said oath, unless a Grace first pass the House for his admittance to the Library.

AN.

3th. That none under the Degree of A. M. LL. B. or M. B. be permitted to put up such Grace.

4th. That no forreigner be permitted the use of the Library without such a sponsor, as the V. Chancellor for the time being shall allow of.

5th. That no one shall borrow any book without express leave from the V. Chancellor for the time being or his lawfull deputy; & a note under his own hand, expressing the name of the book or books so borrowed. The books so lent to be returned within one month. The under library-keeper, or some other person to bring the note to the V. Chancellor for that purpose.

6th. That the library-keepers shall have a book, wherein they shall set down the names of what books are lent out, & to whom, & for how long.

7th. That the V. Chancellor or his deputy, with others, that he shall call to his assistance, do every year (or oftener if he shall think fit) in the long vacation visit & survey all the books in the library by the classical catalogue; & in case they find any book wanting, deduct so much out of the library-keeper's salary as will be sufficient to purchase the like again for the library, according to a decree made by the University in the year 1667.

8th. That every one, who in the opinion of the library-keeper shall return any Book considerably soiled, blotted, or defaced, stand obliged to buy a new book of the same kind, or else to pay double the value of such book; &, if he refuse so to do, that he be ipso facto deprived of

That fifty pounds per An. be paid in four quarterly payments, by the V. Chancellor for the time being to your principal Librarian, out of the common chest; which is proposed to be replaced after the following manner.

2<sup>dly</sup>. That 20<sup>l</sup>. beyond the usual Fees be paid to the Junior Proctor, by every one that subscribes in the Register's book under the title of Baccalaurei ad Baptistam, excepting the Fellows of Kings College.

3<sup>dly</sup>. That from henceforward, every person not bringing a Certificate from the Master, or Locum Tenens of his College, that he did on or before the 1st. of Feb. in his fourth year, declare to him in writing, that he did not intend to proceed in his Batchelor of Arts Degree; shall before his admission to a Batchelor's Degree, either in Law or Physick, pay three pounds beyond the usual fees to the Senior Proctor: And that every person proceeding in his Batchelor of Arts Degree after such declaration, shall pay the same sum beyond the usual fees to the Junior Proctor.

4<sup>thly</sup>. That every person coming from the University of Oxford & Dublin, not having kept the Majority of his Terms here, shall before his admission to a Batchelor's Degree, either in Law or Physick, pay three pounds beyond the usual fees to the Senior Proctor.

5<sup>thly</sup>. That every person proceeding to the Degree of Doctor in Divinity, not being before Batchelor in that Faculty, shall pay 40<sup>s</sup>. beyond the usual fees to the Senior Proctor.

Lastly, that every person before his admission to any Degree in any Faculty, at an extraordinary Commencement, shall pay 20<sup>s</sup>. to the Senior Proctor.

That all these payments be accounted for by the Proctors to the V. Chancellor at his audit, for the benefit of the Common Chest.

Juris aut Medicinæ insigniti sunt, quorum doctrina ac vitæ probitas Academiæ nota est; per quæ etiam nonnulli ad dignitatem ac functionem ecclesiasticam, vel civilem in republicâ pervenerint; quoniam plerumq. variis suis negotiis impediti examinationi literariæ per statuta requisitæ interesse non possunt, post exactum tempus ab hujusmodi Gradu suscepto in statutis præfinitum, dispensari potest: Ita tamen, ut hujusmodi dispensatio non antea Capiti proponatur admittenda, quam consensu majoris partis Præfectorum Collegiorum, nec non majoris partis omnium Doctorum in eadem Facultate in Universitate tunc præsentium per manuum suarum subscriptionem approbetur. Et qui fuerint ita admissi proximis Comitibus intersint, ac in Collegio aliquo juxta Academiæ consuetudinem convivent. 4. Whereas there hath & doth yearly arise some controversies & doubts, whether that divers persons that do proceed Batchelors of Arts have fully & wholly accomplished the years & terms required by the statutes of the University to that Degree; & thereupon great contentions have ensued among the Colleges; & some of such persons so proceeding have been charged with perjury; & such as have subscribed to the said Graces have been challenged as subject to the penalties prescribed in the statutes of the University. For the taking away of such controversies & doubts, & for avoiding of such dangers, it was & is the 15th of Feb. 1578, et Reginae Eliz. 21<sup>o</sup>. by the Right Worshipfull M<sup>r</sup>. Tho. Bing, Doctor of the civill laws, & V. Chancellor of this University, with the assent & consent of his assistants, viz. D<sup>r</sup>. Pern, D<sup>r</sup>. Hawford, D<sup>r</sup>. Chancellor for the time being; & then & there take his oath & pay his Ordinary: out of the which Ordinaries, the V. Chancellor & Proctors are to be allowed their portions yearly, according to the wonted rate & no otherwise. And if any person neglect or refuse to come within the time aforelimited to have his name inrolled; then such person, untill he be inrolled, not to be reputed as a Scholar; neither his time or years to be accounted, as available toward the taking of the Degree aforesaid. And the Tutor of any such person or Scholar to forfeit & pay to the use of the University 6<sup>s</sup>. 8<sup>d</sup>. to be taken & levied by one of the Proctours for the time being. v. inf.

Item, whereas the Statute concerning the aforesaid Degree requireth quadriennium completum, it was & is by the same authority defined, order'd, interpreted, & decreed the day & year abovesaid; that all & singular persons so inrolled, as is aforesaid, before, at, or upon the day when the ordinary sermon ad Clerum is or ought to be made in the beginning of Easter Term, shall be reputed & accounted to have wholly & fully satisfied the Statute, if he shall proceed in the 4th. Lent next following the said sermon. But after that day of the said sermon ad Clerum, if any shall come, then he shall not proceed in the 4th. Lent following.

Item, if any person or persons shall be inrolled as is aforesaid, & afterward depart to his or

Item, if any person or persons so inrolled, or also matriculated shall for a time remain in the University, & then depart or go into the country, & there continue by the space of one quarter of a year or more, such time of his absence from the University shall not be taken or reputed toward the accomplishment of the time required necessary to the said Degree: & this is to be tried by the commons books, as is aforesaid. And therefore the form of their Graces shall be as it was in the old time; ‘*Supplicat

8. Whereas there hath been doubt concerning the true meaning of this statute for Compound-

The meaning of the lawmakers in that statute seeming directly to provide, that the labour & pains of the Officers of the University should be well consider’d of by all such as took Degrees, & are sufficiently provided for of Livings : & by due examination the very words and Grammatical sense thereof leading unto that meaning : we the V. Chancellor & Heads of Colleges do accordingly interpret & set down by joint consent, that from henceforth all persons coming to take Degrees in this University, whose Living or Livings Ecclesiastical of what kind soever, shall be rated to the yearly value of 40 Marks in the book of first fruits or subsidy, or whose living temporal hath been, is, or shall be demised communibus annis at that rate or rent, or that shall be by common estimation accounted to be yearly worth the said sum of 40 Marks, shall be reputed & taken as Compounders. And further, we do interpret those words ‘ Omnes quorum annuus reditus est,’ &c. in the same sta-

1608. 10. Whereas upon these words of the Statute Cap. 21, de Gratiis concedendis, viz. “in quibus studuerint in Academiâ,” & also these words following, “aliter ipsa Gratia nulla sit,” doubt hath lately risen, whether actual Batchelors in Arts, before they can be admitted ad incipiendum must of necessity be continually commorant in the University nine whole Terms, or else their Grace being obtained is frustrate & of no force: We whose names are here underwritten, for the clearing of all controversies in that behalf, both for the present & hereafter, by vertue of the power which by the Statute Cap. 50 is given unto us to interpret all doubts, do declare & interpret the aforesaid words, as followeth, viz. that those, who for their Learning & Manners are according to statute admitted Batchelors in Arts, are not so strictly tied to a local commorancy, & study in the University & town of Cambridge, but that being at the end of nine Terms able by their accustomed exercises & other examinations to approve themselves worthy to be Masters of Arts, may justly be admitted to that Degree: & the reasons of this Interpretation be these.

to residence.

First, that a man once grounded so far in Learning as to deserve a Batchelorship in Arts, is sufficiently furnished to proceed in study by himself, and such conference as he may easily have elsewhere, to attain perfection enough not only for a Mastership but higher Degrees also: as experience dayly teacheth.

Secondly, the constant & customary acceptance of the same statute, Cap. 21, by the continual practice from the first making thereof until this present time; no exception, for aught we can learn, ever having been taken until now to any Batchelor, discontinuer; so he sought not the Degree before the full determination of his nine Terms; & sufficiently by his exercises, &c. approved his own worthiness required to the same.

Thirdly, the great use that there is of these young men in the Church, & commonwealth; who, be they never so towardly, by poverty & want of maintenance must be driven to manual trades, or to be fugitives, except they may be sufferr'd by serving Cures, & teaching of Schools to follow their books in the country; & by that means at least be made fit for better places, that otherwise cannot out of our University be possibly stored with learned men.

Fourthly, we are the rather moved to this our interpretation, because we find by the 9th Chap. of our Statutes, that one coming to Cambridge at 24 years of age may commence Batch. in Divinity, if he shall wholly give himself to that study by the space of ten years; (tho not commorant in the University all that time). And also by interpretation upon another point of this statute now questioned, made the 26 of March, 17th of Eliz. it appeareth, that the interpreters thereof, of whom our then honourable Chancellor was cheif, out of their wisdom & judgment found cause rather to favour discontinuers in matter of form & ceremony, than those that are continually resident in the University. Besides if the letter should be strictly urged against all manner of discontinuers, no such Fellows of Colleges as have licence of absence granted them, either to travel beyond the seas, or to be abroad in the country, can enjoy such grant without their prejudice.

Fifthly & lastly, we find that the aforesaid words being literally taken & construed, no Batchelor either by his own occasion, or by common infection in the town, or other necessary breaking up of any College, being absent any part of a Term in the said nine, could be capable of his Master's Degree, were he ever so worthy. Beside the great prejudice to all former Graduates never so antient, against whom there may lye exception by the same reason upon the same words, 'aliter ipsa Gratia nulla sit.'

And where it may be objected, that this interpretation cant well stand with a former made 21<sup>o</sup>. Eliz. 1578, requiring strict continuing in the University, & permitting no time of absence with friends, or in a Grammar School; it is evident by the words of that interpretation, that this restraint is only for young scholars matriculated before any Degree taken, & therefore so green & ungrounded as they can't of themselves profit abroad in the country in our University Studys, as others, being actual Batchelors; against whose discontinuance there is no mention in the whole interpretation; but the same rather tacitè allowed. And yet for the said young Scholars there is a favourable mitigation in the cases there expressed in the end.

Yet not willing by this our interpretation to have the University abused, in conferring of so venerable a Degree; we think it requisite, & very agreeable to the true intent of the said statute, & so do explain, that yearly hereafter long Discontinuers do bring with them to the V. Chancellor then being, when they come to take the said Degree, sufficient testimony, that they have lived in the mean time soberly & studiously the course of a scholars life, & that testimony to be under the hands & seals of three preaching Ministers, Masters of Arts at least, & living upon their Benefices, near the place of their longest aboad; as also under the hand of the Master of the family, where such persons discontinuing have been entertained, & resided; if the said Master of the family can be gotten to join in testimony with the said three Preachers; otherwise it shall be sufficient to bring the hands of the said three Preachers.

And for better approving of their proffiting in Learning in such time of their discontinuance, that they perform their Acts for the Inceptors Degree In luce, so much as may be, according to such order as the University shall allow; viz. that their Batchelor's Disputations, Declamations & answering the Masters in Arts, or two of these at least according to the Statutes be open & ordinary, so far forth as the ordinary days for the said Acts will permit.

In witness whereof we have put to our hands the 25th. of March 1608.

Ita tamen ut si fortian vel sextus vel nonus ille dies, vel in diem festum, aut in vacationem propter exequias incidat, tum disputatio differetur in diem Jovis in proximâ hebdomadâ subsequentem. Nos Procan. et Præpositi Collegiorum quorum nomina subscribuntur (ut honori et commodo Academiæ consulamus, et omnem ea de re scrupulum in futurum eximamus) Statutum prædictum de Gratiis solummodo personis privatæ conditionis concedendis interpretandum, et Nobiles eorumq. filios lege illa liberos et omnino solutos decernimus et declaramus: in hanc autem sententiam venimus hisce ducti rationibus:

Primò, lex dicta ea solum ratione sancita videtur, ne cui Gradum adire contingat furtim et sine arbitris, vel absq. exercitiis completis (non nisi pleno Terminò peragendis) quæ tamen a personis é Nobilium ordine ad Gradum suscipiendum minimè requiruntur.

Secundò, Statutis non minus Academiæ quam regni provisum est, ut Nobiles privilegiis gaudeant; et á sortis inferioris hominibus non minus immunitatibus quam titulis suis, et Natalium dignitate distinguantur. Stat. 21, Cap. 46.

Tertiò, Rationi dissonum videtur, statutum illud Gratiam pro Gradu suscipiendo extra Terminum petitam Nobilium titulo insignitis dene-gasse, quibus Gradum suscipiendi, nullo habito ad Terminum aliquem, sed generis solummodò claritatem, respectu, licentiam fecit: aut legem de minimis (temporis nimirum circumstantiis) nullâ præsertim de causâ curare voluisse.

About Compounders.

1686. 16. An Interpretation made by the V. Chancellor & Heads, whose names are here underwritten, the 31st day of October 1686, of that part of the 49th Statute of the University which concerns compounders, viz. omnes quorum annuus redditus est ad valorem quadraginta Marcarum, præter stipendia quæ habent a Collegiis suis, aut ab Academiâ ratione alicujus Lecturæ, ad Gradum aliquem scholasticum promovendi dabunt Cancellario, &c. & also of that part of the said statute which concerns incorporations, viz. Incorporatus in aliquâ facultate solvet prout de corporatis dictum est.

Whereas several ecclesiastical preferments of considerable value are not rated or so much as mentioned in the book of first fruits or subsidies; We think it agreeable to reason, & the true meaning of the Statute aforesaid (viz. omnes quorum annuus redditus, &c.) that such Deanaries, Prebends, Rectories, Vicaridges, & all other ecclesiastical preferments be rated according to their reputed value, & as they are or may be lett or rented. Since therefore the Interpretation of this said Statute made 1599 was intended for the encouragement of the officers; we do judge the meaning thereof was not to restrain the Statute, or to take away any of their just dues, which was not in their power to do, but to prevent controversies, where the book of first fruits did settle the value, allowing that for a sufficient proof. But for other cases, where the ecclesiasticall preferment is not valued in the book of first fruits, the general words of the Statute ought to take place, if good proof can be made.

And whereas it hath been a frequent practice among Candidates for degrees having compounding estates, to alienate or make over the same, whereby the said Statute (viz. omnes quorum annuus redditus, &c.) is eluded, & the Officers defrauded; for the prevention of such fraudulent practices for the future, We do hereby order & decree, that if the party so alienating or in any-wise conveying hath reserved to himself any Power whereby he may or (without any such reserved power) actually does take & receive to his own use directly or indirectly to the value of 40 Marks per An. out of such estate; every such person to be taken & reputed a compound-er; & to satisfy the officers accordingly.

Also whereas by another clause in the said Statute it is expressed in these words, Incorporatus in aliqua Facultate solvet prout de corporatis dictum est; the sense & meaning of which clause seems plainly to be this, viz. in case any strangers & forreigners should think fit to take any Degree in this University, they should be liable to the same payments as our Gremials are.

A. D.

We do therefore interpret & decree, that all incorporate persons in this University for the future, which according to the abovementioned Statute, & the Interpretation thereof have compounding estates, shall be taken & reputed compounders, & shall satisfy the University Officers accordingly; Oxford men who shall be admitted ad eundem & proceed to no farther Degree only excepted.

the next year viz. 1607, the next Dr. in Divinity in seniority being likewise Head of a College, shall preach the said 5th of Nov. in the said Church: and so all the rest of the Doctors, & others the Heads of Houses being Divines shall preach in their seniority successively the day & place aforesaid perpetuis futuris temporibus, either by himself, or (upon just cause to be excused or allowed by the V. Chan. for the time being) by some other Head of a College, by him whose course it is to be procured upon pain & forfeiture of five pounds for every default: the same to be paid to the use of the common chest of the same University: and the V. Chan. then newly elected, or that shall or may be elected that day, to be chargeable at his account to the University for the said sum of five pounds so forfeited. Further, we do likewise consent & assent, that every such 5th. day of Nov<sup>r</sup>. there shall be an Oration in King's College Chappell in the said University at such an hour in the afternoon, as by the V. Chan. for the time being shall be thought meet & convenient: And in case no V. Chan. in the afternoon of the same day, & in the aforesaid Chappell: after the end of which Oration it is thought meet, that solemn service should follow presently in the same place with joyfull singing & hearty thanksgiving. The first Oration to be made by the new Orator of the University; & the next year & ever after perpetuis futuris temporibus by such an one as the V. Chan. or his Deputy, that shall be in place

1606. 13. Whereas upon the 20th. of Feb. 1606 there was foul & great disorder committed at the time of a comedy in King's Coll. by most rude & barbarous throwing many great stones at & thro' the hall windows, with great outcries & shouting by multitudes of Scholars & others, for the space of about two hours together; there being then assembled the hall full not only of inferiour sort, but also of divers young noblemen, Doctors, Batchelors in Divinity, Masters of Arts, to their great offence, annoyance, & disturbance; beside the breaking of many other windows about the said College, & a great post of timber violently pulled out of the ground; & therewith divers running on a strong gate, the same was broke open (an outrage in some such like sort committed in other Colleges afore time, yet in that excessive manner the like not known among Scholars). For exemplary censure upon the present, & for remedy of any like future hereafter in any publick assembly in the University, it is, upon good consideration & resolution, order'd & decreed by M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. & the heads of Colleges as follows: that whosoever being non-

A. D.

Graduate, or Graduate, or privileged person, is or shall be found or convinced in the abovesaid late & strange disorder at the said comedy, a thrower of stones against the said Glass windows, (especially against the Hall windows) a maker of loud shouts & outcries, or a violent breaker open of doors or gates by a main post pulled up; or shall hereafter be found in any like assembly in the time of any play, shew, comedy, or tragedy, committing the same or like offensive riotous action; or else a partaker, Counsellour, or inciter, shall, if they be convinced to be principall offenders before M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. & the more of the Heads then at home, be banished the University, If offending in lower Degree (then being Graduates) besides private satisfaction for the harm done, shall be suspended their Degree; so to continue at the discretion of M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. & also to be stay'd for one whole year for taking further Degree, when his time for the same shall come. But if such offenders shall be non-Graduates, or privileged persons, then being non-adulti, they shall be corrected in the Schooles by the rod; if adulti, they shall make some open confession of their fault in the said Schooles, in the presence of such as M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. shall call; & nevertheless both sorts of them shall be made incapable for one whole year of their expected Degree, when their time cometh. And if any that have or shall have part in the disorders or any of them, not being a Scholar, shall be found an offender, then every such person shall be punished by imprisonment, & sitting in the stocks at the Bull-ring in the markett-place, so long as to M<sup>r</sup>. Against night-jettors, keepers of Greyhounds, &c.

14. Whereas there hath divers times fallen out sundry disorders, especially in the night time, by such Scholars as take upon them (being but private persons) to goe forth into the town pretending & abusing the Proctors authority, & carrying with them divers unfit & unstayed persons, whereby many inconveniencies have ensued to the disquiet of the inhabitants, & discredit of the University. And whereas also diverse Scholars of the University, especially of late years, have used to shoot in guns, Cross-bows, & Stone-bows, both near home & also in the neighbour towns, where they have wandred abroad: and usually have kept greyhounds, & some of them hunting horses to that end (either by themselves or others in the town) for coursing & hunting to the destroying of the King's game, & to the mispending of their time; (having had often warning heretofore from Mr. V. Chan. upon his Majesties inhibition also signified in every College, yet stil have presumed to continue the same disorders). For remedy whereof it is by Mr. V. Chan. & the Heads of Colleges provided & decreed, that whatsoever Scholars or Students or any retaining to them shall hereafter be found & convinced, either to take upon him the Proctors authority as is abovesaid; or to accompany any that shall so presume to usurp the said authority; & shall goe abroad making the night scrutiny in the streets into mens houses or fields adjoining; or shall shoot in guns, cross-bows, or stone-bows, either within the limits of the University or without; or shall keep by himself or others any greyhounds, or shall wander in the fields either with greyhounds, guns, cross-bows, or stone-bows, it is by the consent above-said decreed, that every Scholar so offending, being convicted & adjudged in manner aforesaid, shall incurr respectively (according to the degrees of his offence) the severall penalties above specified for the disturbers of public assemblys. And if any shall be found a keeper of greyhounds in the town for any Scholer, Student, or Scholer's servant, every such shall sufferr imprisonment, & five shillings mulct for the first time; & after so offending, double punishment, viz. ten shillings mulct, & imprisonment at M<sup>r</sup>. V. 1681. 27. Whereas there have been formerly several Orders & Decrees made, to oblige young Scholars to constant residence in the University 'till they have taken their first Degree at least; which have of late years been quite neglected, to the great disadvantage of the Scholars themselves, as well as the dishonour of the University, it was, the day & year abovewritten, resolved & decreed by Mr. V. Chan. with the consent of the Heads of Colleges, who have signed this order, that according to an antient interpretation made in this case, if any person after his admission into any College in this University, shall not continue the greatest part of every Term (excepting only the first & the last) during the whole time of his 4 years, he shall not be capable of being admitted to his Degree with the rest of his year, or have the time of his absence accompted towards the accomplishment of that required necessary for his first Degree: And therefore the form of the Grace for that purpose shall be in the antient stile: *Supplicat Reverentiis vestris A. Furthermore, whereas it has been formerly decreed, that the Master of every College shall exhibit to the V. in Barnwell.

1675. 30. Whereas there hath been lately much complaint of disorders committed at Barnwell, & that divers houses there are become infamous for harbouring lewd women, drawing loose Scholars to resort thither: It is order'd & decreed by the Heads of Colleges, whose names are underwritten, that hereafter no Scholar whatsoever (except Officers of the University, performing their duty in searching houses) upon any pretence whatsoever, shall enter into the house of Francis Harvey, or of W<sup>m</sup>. Butler, or of W<sup>m</sup>. Larkin, or of Edw. Davies, or of John Clark, or into any other House of bad report in Barnwell: And that if any Scholar shall presume to disobey this decree, he shall for his misdemeanour & contumacy be immediately expelled from the University.

1680 .32. Whereas by several Statutes & Orders, very severe punishments have been often threatned against such, who performing exercise in the Sophisters Schooles should on that occasion be at any expence: It is agreed & absolutely determined at a meeting of the Heads, whose names are here subscribed, that if any one shall give, or accept of any treat, gloves, or other present, at any time, upon the forementioned account, he shall certainly be stopped from taking the Degree of Batch. of Arts for one whole year after such offence: And likewise, that the same punishment shall be as certainly inflicted upon those who shall obstinately neglect to perform such exercises as are required of them by the Proctor.

Good M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. I have sent you his majesties hand to his own directions: I think you have no president, that ever a King, first with his own mouth, then with his own hand, gave such directions; & therefore you shall do very well to keep that writing curiously, & the directions religiously; & to give his Majesty a good account of them carefully; which I pray God you may; & so with my love to yourself & the rest of the Heads, I commit you to God.

The King's directions to the University.

From Court, this 12 of Dec. 1616.

JAMES WINTON.

His Majesty's directions to the V. Chan. & Heads of Houses in the University of Cambridge, given by himself to D<sup>r</sup>. Hills, V. Chan. D<sup>r</sup>. Richardson, M<sup>r</sup>. of Trin. Coll. to D<sup>r</sup>. Carey, Dean of S<sup>t</sup>. Paul's, D<sup>r</sup>. Davenant, M<sup>r</sup>. of Queen's, D<sup>r</sup>. Guynne, M<sup>r</sup>. of St. John's, on Dec. 3<sup>d</sup>. 1616, at Newmarket.

1st. His Majesty signified his pleasure, that he would have all, that take * any Degree in schools to subscribe to the three Articles.

* Only Batch<sup>r</sup>. of Divin. & all Doctors were to do this by Gr. 1613.

formable both by subscription & every other way.

3<sup>dly</sup>. That all Students do resort to the sermons at S<sup>t</sup>. Mary's, & be restrained from going to any other Church in the time of S<sup>t</sup>. Mary's sermons; & that provision be made, that the sermons in S<sup>t</sup>. Mary's be diligently performed both before noon & after noon.

4<sup>thly</sup>. That the new seats be removed, & that the Doctors sit in the Church as they were anciently wont to do, & that provision be made for some convenient place for the sons of Noblemen.

5<sup>thly</sup>. That the ordinary divinity act be constantly kept with three replyers.

6<sup>thly</sup>. That there be a great restraint for Scholars haunting town houses, especially in the night.

7<sup>thly</sup>. That all Scholars both at Chapell, & at the schools keep their scholastical habit.

8<sup>thly</sup>. That young Students in divinity be directed to study such books as be most agreeable in doctrine & discipline to the church of England: & excited to bestow their time in the fathers & Councils, Schoolmen, historys & controversies; & not to insist too long upon compendiums & abbreviations, making them the ground of their study in Divinity.

9<sup>thly</sup>. That no man either in Pulpit or in Schools be sufferr'd to maintain dogmatically any point of doctrine, that is not allowed by the Church of England.

Lastly. That M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chan. & the two Professours, or two of the Heads of houses, do every Michaelmas, when his Majesty resorts into these parts, wait upon his Majesty, & give his Majesty a just account how these his Majesties instructions are observed.

JAMES REX.

4. Whereas it is held, that the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of our University of Cambridge, & of all the students & members of the Colleges there, belongeth to the Chancellor, & in his absence to the V. Chan. & the subordinate ministers of the University: & that neither the Bishop of Ely, nor any of his Officers, nor any other ordinary hath jurisdiction over the University, or the students & members thereof, as they are Collegiates; except in case of speciall visitations; which privilege of our University we are not willing to have infringed: yet finding it most necessary, that the Laws, Canons, & Constitutions, Rites, & received laudable customs of our Church, should there especially be observed (it being one of the principal seminaries of this state for church & commonwealth); We do require the Chancellor, & in his absence the V. Chan. of our said University, together with the Heads & all others to whom it doth or may appertain, carefully themselves to observe, & to see that others do observe the ensuing articles: & to be able from time to time to give us a good account of the performance thereof, upon peril of our high displeasure, & of such penalty, as the law in that case may justly inflict.
- Injunctions about matters of Religion.

First, we do command, that all the ecclesiastical Laws, Canons, & constitutions of this our Church of England, so far forth as they concern divine service, be duly observed in all & every

the Colleges, without immutation, upon any pretence of local statutes whatsoever.

Item, that all things heretofore given by us hither in charge be duly observed & performed, & that they be ready to give us such account thereof in due time, as heretofore we have directed.

Item, whereas it is & hath been the antient custom of that our University, to forbear the accustomed University sermons on Christmas day, Easter day, & Whit Sunday on the forenoon, in regard, that in the several Colleges there are, or ought to be had, common prayers, a Sermon, & a holy Communion administred, to which the Master, Fellows, & Scholars, should resort in their several Colleges: We do require, that our said Chancellour, & in his absence the V. Chan. & others to whom the Ecclesiasticall Jurisdiction of the University is pretended to belong, & every Master in his private College do so provide, that on the said three festivalls there be had the divine service, as it is by the book of common prayers appointed for the said several feast daies: & that a Sermon & Communion be had on the said several daies; & that all the members & students of the severall Colleges repair to the Chapells of the said Colleges, there to participate in the divine service, & to communicate in the holy Sacrament: from which divine service & Communion no member or student of any such College shall be permitted to absent himself, unless upon some just & necessary occasion thought fit to be allowed of by the Master & Deans of the College for the time being.

Item, that all communicants do take the Communion kneeling, according to the form prescribed in the book of common prayer, & the Canons of this our Church of England, & not otherwise: And that the laudable custom of coming to Chappel in Surplices & Hoods, according to their Degree, upon the accustom'd days, be observed by all the Masters, Fellows, Scholars, & Students of all Colleges; & that they so continue in their Surplices & Hoods at all times during the time of common prayer & sermon, & administration of the sacrament.

Item, we do command, that no sermons or lectures be had in any parish Church of the town, except in case of a funeral, or the like necessary & extraordinary occasions, on Sundays & holidays, but betwixt the hours of nine & eleven in the forenoon, & one & three in the afternoon; that there may be no interruption of the divine service in the parish Churches betwixt the hours of 3 & 4; nor pretence for scholars absenting themselves from catechising in their Colleges, to be had betwixt the hours of 3 & 4; nor from their common prayers, which are to be betwixt the hours of 4 & 5 on Sundays & holydays.

Item, we do require & command, that the commendable use of chatechising in Colleges betwixt the hours of three & four on Sundays & holydays be carefully & duly observed: to which, we require due care to be had, that those of the College, especially under the Degree of Masters of Arts, be compelled to resort.

Item, we do command, that no new-erected lectures, or sermons, be permitted in any parish Church of the town, that may withdraw scholars from the catechising & divine service in their

Colleges on Sundays & holidays, or on the week days, being no holidays, to withdraw Scholars from their attendance at the exercises of learning, lectures, disputations, determinations, or declamations, either publick or private: And for that the jurisdiction of the town & parish Churches is pretended to belong to the Bishop of Ely, & his officers; we do require of him & them, that they be in all things carefull on their part to observe the directions, so far forth as concerneth them; & also be aiding & assisting to the Chancellour, V. Chan. & officers of our University for the better observation of these our commandments in the parish Churches: And that no Fellow, Student, or member of any College, of what Degree or condition soever, not having cure in the same Church, be permitted to read any ordinary lecture or preach any ordinary sermons on set days in any parish Church in the town, except in St. Maries, unless he be legally authorized thereunto. Wherein we think it fit, that as the party is a Collegiate, he should obtain allowance from the Chancellor or V. Chan. & as he is to preach in a parish Church of the Bishop of Ely's jurisdiction, he may not do it but by the Bp.'s licence.

Item, we do forbid that women of the town be permitted to repair to the Chappel of any College, to common-places, or other exercises of divinity, unless it be in case of an English sermon ad populum, for which the bell of such College is rung, or to the ordinary prayers in King's College Chappel.

Item, we do require & command that upon the discovery to the Chancellour or V. Chan. for the time being, of any contempt & breach of order by law & laudable custom required; or of any fancifull conceipt, savouring of Judaism, Popish superstition, or Puritanism, disagreeing from the laws & approved customes of our Church of England; that the same be in due time speedily & carefully checked, & reformed; that it be not suffer'd to take root & grow up to the distraction of our subjects, or violating the unity of our Church. And we do impose the same charge in the like occasion or occasions, upon every Head & Master of a College in our said University. And we do impose the same commandment of these our directions concerning Colleges, that have special visitors appointed them, in whom the ecclesiasticall jurisdiction is upon the said Visitors, whosoever they be, which we have before imposed upon the Chancellour & V. Chan. of our said University for the time being.

Lastly, we do command that a copy of these our directions be deliver'd to the Master of every College, requiring that he deliver the same or a copy thereof to the special Visitor of his said College, where any such are appointed, other than the Chancellour or V. Chan. afore-said; that he may see these our ordinances & commands duly observed. And howsoever we deliver this admonition in general terms, our will is not that the same be understood as an aspersion upon the whole University of inconformity, but rather as an encouragement to those Colleges & governours, that, according to duty, keep order; & as an injunction for speedy reformation in such as are culpable.

His Majesty's Injunctions, orders, & directions, to the V. Chan. & Heads of houses in the University of Cambridge, to be duly published for the better government of the same University.
Given at the Court of Newmarket this fourth day of March, An. Dni 1629.

First, that all those directions & orders of our father of blessed memory, which at any time were sent to our said University, be duly observed, & put in execution.

Secondly, that whereas we have been informed, that of late years many Students of that our University, not regarding their own Birth, Degree, & Quality, have made divers contracts of Marriage with women of mean estate, & of no good fame in that town, to their great disparagement, the discontent of their parents & friends, & to the dishonour of the government of our University: We will & command you, that at all times hereafter, if any taverner, victualler, or In-holder, or any other inhabitant of that town, or within the jurisdiction of that University, shall keep any daughter or other woman in his house, to whom there shall resort any scholars of that University of what condition soever, to mispend

tuition of them; that upon notice thereof, you do presently convent the said Scholars, & the said woman or women, thus suspected, before you; & upon due examination if that you find cause therefore, that you command the said woman or women (according to the form of your Charter against women de malo suspectas) to remove out of the said University, & four miles of the same: And, if any refuse presently to obey your commands, & to be order'd by you herein, that then you bind them over with suretys to appear before the Lords of our Privy Ccouncil, to answer their contempt, & such matters as shall be objected against them, & if any refuse to enter such bonds, that you imprison them, 'til they shall either remove, or put in such bonds with suretys.

Thirdly, that you be carefull that all the Statutes of our University be duly executed, especially those de vestitu Scholarium, et de modestia et morum urbanitate. And whereas we are informed, that Batchelors of Law, Physick, & Masters of Arts, & others of higher Degree, pretend, that they are not subject to your censure, if they resort to such houses as are mentioned in the said Statute, to eat, drink, or play, or take tobacco, to the mispending their time, & to the corrupting of others by their ill examples, & to the scandalizing of the government of our said University: Our will & pleasure is, by these presents, that you do also command them, & every of them, that they forbear from coming to any such houses, otherwise, or at other times, than by the said statute they of inferiour order & degree are allowed to doe, any statute or concession to the contrary whatsoever notwithstanding: &, if any refuse to obey you herein, that you proceed against them as contumaces; &, if there be cause, that you also signify their names to us, or to the Lords of our Privy Council.

Fourthly, that you do severely punish all such of your Body, of what degree or condition soever, as shall contemn their superiours or misbehave themselves either in word or deed toward the V. Chan. or the Proctors, or any other officers of our University, especially in the executing their office.

Lastly, we will & command, that a copy of these our directions be deliver'd to the Master of every College; & that he cause the same to be published to those of his College, & then to be register'd in the Registers of their Colleges, & duly observed & kept by all persons, whom they may concern.

Instructions for the Vice-Chancellor & Heads of our University of Cambridge.

First, that all the directions & orders of our father & grandfather of blessed memory, which at any time were sent to our University of Cambridge, be duly observed & put in execution, especially such as concern obedience & due respect to be given by all persons of that body to their superiours & governours, the officers of that our University: Also such as concern the restraint of such as hold lectures, or preach in any parish Church in the town of Cambridge, with-

Furthermore, that there be a review made of all licences for University preachers, which have been granted in these disorderly times, since the beginning of the year 1645. And that all such licences be called in by the V. Chan. & the persons so licensed put again to be approved by the vote of the present University, assembled in congregation; or if rejected, then others to be chosen in their places.

Mary Magdalen, Emanuel, & Sidney, have from henceforth equal privileges with the rest of the Colleges in that our University, of nominating & presenting Proctors, Taxors, & Scrutators successively, according to such proportion & order as shall be judged by the V. And that in the interim, for the better preserving the Peace of the University, the late *Circle, by which these three with the other Colleges have had their courses, shall remain & be observed: any thing contained in the Statutes of our said University notwithstanding; Whereof the V. 9. Whereas by the Statutes of our University of Camb. & injunctions given both by our father & grandfather of blessed memory, & confirmed by ourself, the ordinary Divinity Act or Disputation is to be performed by three opponents, & an account thereof is to be returned to our self: & whereas we are given to understand, that notwithstanding the said statutes in that behalf made, many of late years not tending either the honour of that our University, or their own repute, have so far neglected their duty therein, as that there is seldom above one opponent or two, often not any; or but one of those appointed in course; but such only as the respondent can procure: We therefore, out of our princely care to preserve that good esteem, which that our University hath formerly had both at home & abroad; & the better to promote the study of Divinity by the due performance of exercises therein, have thought fit to make & establish this following order to be observed by all whom it may concern, as a statute of our said University, that is to say, that every person appointed in Course to oppose at the ordinary Divinity Act, not performing his duty therein, shall be punished 10<sup>s</sup>. and moreover shall stand obliged under the same penalty to oppose at the next Divinity Act, & so, from time to time; untill such time as he shall either perform the duty in his own person, or procure some other in his stead, upon just cause to be approved by the V. Right trusty & wellbeloved Cousin & Counsellor, & trusty & wellbeloved, we greet you well: Whereas upon our late happy Restauration to our just rights, there were persons of eminency as well for their Learning & standing in our University of Cambridge, as their sufferings for us & with us in the common calamitys of the time, We thought fit, as a speciall mark of our Royall favour, to conferr Degrees upon them, without oblidging them to those exercises, which the Statutes of our said University require: But since those worthy persons have had the benefit of our princely favour, we have thought fit to declare it our will & pleasure, that all persons who at any time hereafter shall come to you with our letters mandatory for a Degree in any science or faculty, shall before their admission thereunto personally subscribe in the common form &

Chan. in the Regent House, by bold & irreverent language, by open cavilling or contesting, or by abetting any other in any such contest, or making any other address than by reverend & respectfull application to him; & if any shall offerr to continue doing any publick act, as reading suffrages or numbring votes, after the V. Chan. hath dismissed the congregation or convocation: & if any the Proc-tors or Scrutators in any case shall refuse to perform their duty, in any part thereof, according to the Statutes, & laudable customs of the said House, against the admonition of the V. About preach-
rukes.

Oct. 8<sup>o</sup>.1674. 12. M<sup>r</sup>. V. Chancellour & Gentlemen,

His Majesty having taken notice of the liberty which several persons in holy orders have taken, to wear their hair & perukes of an unusual & unbecoming length, hath commanded me to let you know, that he is much displeased therewith, & strictly enjoins, that all such persons as profess or intend the study of Divinity, do for the future wear their hair in a manner more suitable to the gravity & sobriety of their profession, & that distinction which was always maintained between the habits of men devoted to the ministry & other persons.

And whereas his Majesty is informed, that the practice of reading sermons is generally taken up by the preachers before the University, & therefore sometimes continued even before himself: His Majesty hath commanded me to signify to you his pleasure, that the said practice, which took beginning with the disorders of the late times, be wholly laid aside, & that the afore-said preachers deliver their sermons, both in Latin & English, by memory or without book; as being a way of preaching, which his Majesty judgeth most agreeable to the use of all foreign Churches, to the custom of the University heretofore, & the nature & intendment of that holy exercise. And that his Majesty's commands in the premises may be duly regarded & observed, his farther Pleasure is, that the names of all such ecclesiastick persons, as shall wear their hair (as heretofore) in an unfitting imitation of the fashions of laymen; or that shall continue the present supine & sloathfull way of preaching, be from time to time signified unto me by the V. Chan. for the time being, upon pain of his Majesty's displeasure.

Having in obedience to his Majesty's will, signified thus much unto you, I shall not doubt of your ready compliance; & the rather because his Majesty intends to send the same Injunctions very speedily to the University of Oxford, whom I am assured you will equall, as in all other excellencies, so in obedience to the King, especially when his commands tend so much to the honour & esteem of that renowned University, whose wellfare is so heartily desired, & shall alway be endeavour'd by,

Mr. V. Chancellor & Gentlemen,

Your loving Friend & Chancellor,

MONMOUTH.

Lect. & Pub. in plenâ Cong. Reg.

A. D.
1675. 13.

Quæres to which the V. Chan. & Hheads of the University of Camb. are desired to answer.

1. Whether my last letter of delivering sermons by memory, & decent wearing of hair had its due effect or not.

2. Whether the Masters of the severall Colleges duly perform their severall duties & exercises incumbent upon them by the Statutes of their respective Colleges.

3. What antient & laudable customs are there, which by the disorders of the late times are now wholly disused & laid aside.

4. What Exercises are required of the Fellows of the severall Colleges in any Faculty, & under what penaltys do the Statutes of the said Colleges enjoin the performance of them, & whether they are performed or not.

5. Whether the Statutes of the severall Colleges appoint any exercises to the Fellow-Commoners; & what they are; & under what penaltys to be performed.

6. Whether the Statute which appoints the gates of the severall Colleges to be shut at 8 of the Clock in the winter, & 9 in the summer, & the keys to be brought to the Master, be duly observed or not; & if not, what is the cause thereof.

7. Whether the privileges of the University are by any person or persons, about the town, infringed, & violated; & especially whether the privilege of being sued only in the V. Chancellor's Court be invaded; & any privileged Persons be molested by Writs from any other

A. D.

Courts; & if so, what do they conceive the most proper way to redress so great an inconveniency.

8. Whether the Statute, which forbids any person to come to the taverns, unless to meet some friends out of the country, be duly observed or not.

9. Whether the Candidates for any Degree do duly perform the exercises appointed by the Statutes before their admission thereto.

10. Whether the statute, which enjoyns all persons under the years of 40 diligently to frequent divine service morning & evening, be duly observed; & the penalty of 2<sup>d</sup> for every default be duly inflicted on those who break the said statute.

11. Whether the Doctors & Masters in the several Facultys do resort to the Congregations & general meetings of the University in the Regent house, in the habits & ornaments appointed by the Statute.

12. Whether the Coffee-houses be much frequented or not; by what sort & degree of men; & at what hour.

13. What persons have admittance into the publick Library; & upon what caution.

Answers to the Quæres proposed in his Majesty's name to the Heads of the University; agreed on in a meeting of the Heads & Presidents Aug. 9, 1675.

1. That his Grace's letter, of delivering sermons by memory, & the decent wearing of hair, hath had very good effect with many; & that it may have its due effect with all, it shall be our care to our power in our several places.

2. For the Masters of Coll<sup>r</sup>. duly performing their exercises incumbent on them by the Statutes of their respective Coll<sup>r</sup>. we hear not of any complaint, & hope there is no just cause for any.

3. The laudable customs laid aside in the late times are generally restored; those of greater note, that are stil too much desired, are these.

1. The comely solemnity of Master's, Batch.<sup>r</sup> & Sophister's attendance upon, Diasas from the Coll. to the Schools, & back again. 2. The antient custom of Inceptors coming out of the country to visit after the later Act. 3. The number of the Batchelours, who should sit in Lent is far short of what it hath used to be.

6. The Statutes of shutting the College gates at the sett times, & bringing up the keys to the Master's lodgings, are generally well observed; only some use the more benign interpretation, & call it 8 'til 9 in winter, & 9 'til 10 in summer: And too often some of the Coll. are not then come in, so that the Masters are fain to permitt the opening of them again, rather than that they should be abroad in the town.

7. Many Scholars, Scholars servants, & privileged persons have of late, by the advice of Attorneys, (as 'tis said) who live in Camb. been arrested & sued by writs procured out of his Majesty's Courts at Westminster upon Actions of Debts, injuries, & other causes cognizable in the V. Chan'. or Commissary's Courts only, manifestly to the breach & infringing of the Charters & privileges of the University, granted by several of his Majesty's predecessors, & confirmed by Act of Parliament 13<sup>o</sup>. Eliz. The main cause of which violence offered us, we take to be, the great trouble & charge of producing & pleading our Charters in Westminster hall, much above what either the University or any mean persons are able to bear. The evill is so great, that we can att present but humbly pray a remedy.

8. The Statute for Scholars of whatsoever Profession or Degree not going to taverns (saving in some cases allowed by the same Statute) is too frequently transgressed: Notwithstanding the endeavours of the V. Chan. & other Officers of the University.

9. None are admitted to any Degree without performing statutable exercises, or putting in cautions for the performance of them, which yet are not seldom forfeited.

A. D.

10. The celebrating of divine service is duly performed; but the religious frequenting of it is not so in many Coll<sup>s</sup>. by many under the years of 40, (as 'tis generally said) nor is it usual (at least in most Coll<sup>s</sup>.) to punish any Absents save Bachelors & Undergraduates.

11. The Doctors in the several Faculties do generally resort to Congregations in the Regent house, & to sermons Ad Clerum, & supplications in St. Mary's, in the habits & ornaments appointed by Statute; & so do the University officers, as Proctors, Taxors, & Scrutators; & those of the head, & some few others in theirs: but the Non-Regents & Regents are much failing herein; especially the Regents in their Habits at Congregations, & in their caps & hoods at English sermons, & abroad in the town.

12. The Coffee houses are daily frequented, & in great numbers of all sorts (the Heads of houses & other Doctors excepted) at all hours, especially morning & evening.

13. No University members under the Degree of Masters of Arts have admittance to the use of the publick Library, & those upon no other caution but their Matriculation oath, taken at their admission into the University. If any strangers be permitted the use of the Library, it is by licence given them from the V. Chancellor.

 whereas we have been given to understand, that several disputes have heretofore arisen in that our University about conferring honorary Degrees without time or exercise upon Baronetts & Knights, who were members of our said University : We have thought fit in order to the settling of that matter for the time to come, hereby to signify to you, that we are graciously pleased to allow such Baronetts & Knights, who shall be members of our University, from time to time, to take their Degrees of M<sup>r</sup>. of Arts in this honorary way, without time or exercise, (if there shall be no just exceptions to the particular persons) & our intention is, that this shall not extend to any others but such only as are qualified by the statute in that case provided. Trusty & wellbeloved, we greet you well :
Whereas the Lady Margaret, late Countess of the discharging of his expences in his journey :

We, understanding that the salary of the said Preacher is now very small & inconsiderable, & therefore being disposed to free him from the said expensive duties, have thought fit, & accordingly do hereby dispense with all those that shall be her Preachers for the future, for their not preaching at the places aforesaid; Provided, that they do all other exercises in the University, unto which by the said foundation or custom they are obliged. And our Pleasure also is, that you alter the Oath, which the said Preachers at their entrance were to take, according to these premises. And that you cause these our royal let-

And whereas you the V. Chan. of that our University, with very many of the Heads of Colleges there, have certified, that you do not know any inconvenience or disadvantage it can be to the University or Faculty of Physick, if the exercise of Candidates & Probationers for the Degree of Batch. in that Faculty should be reduced to, & established in the same state & condition, that the Exercise of Candidates for the same in Law are at this present, by direction of the University Statutes; especially if the said Candidates in Physick do still stand bound to one opposition as formerly. Also the most Reverend Father in God our right trusty & entirely beloved Counsellor, William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, having given his approbation of the said petition, conceiving it very reasonable & worthy of our favour; we have therefore thought fit to order, establish, & appoint, that the exercise of Candidates for the Degree of Batch. of Physick be hereafter according to that for the same Degree in Law, (save as before excepted, that they still stand bound to one opposition as formerly) any statute or cus-

MUCH the greater part of the preceding Work being in Latin, it was natural to give the Preliminary Dissertation in the same dress, particularly, when some things could appear best in that form; still a portion of it being in English, a few observations in our vernacular language also cannot be improper, and, as being likely to be preferred by most readers, become almost necessary. Even scholars, for whose use this volume is principally intended, choose to arrive at an author's meaning by the readiest way.

Indeed, agreeably to what was announced in the Paper of Proposals, the Preliminary Dissertation was at first intended to be in our own language, and the present was written as a preliminary one. The Latin Address was an after-thought: and of this mention should be made, to account for the manner in which both are executed. Two or three ideas, which have already occurred in the Latin Address, will occur again in the ensuing Dissertation: it was deemed expedient to give them in English for the sake of the English reader: these, however, are but few: and notice will be taken of them, whenever they return.

This being premised, let us proceed to the matter in hand. It is proposed, then, in the following pages to state first the nature of the present work, and to make a few remarks on it; 2dly, to give a short account of its compilers; and 3dly, to shew its use and application.

First, as to the work itself, this, as the title indicates, professes to be an Index or Table of all the Charters, and other Documents of the Privileges of the University of Cambridge; reaching from ancient to more modern times, and arranged in the most regular and chronological order, according to the Christian era, and our English kings; in its range liberal and extensive, though in its display not ample and wide; to satisfy curiosity, if even to excite it, not various enough, nor abundant; but of sufficient authority to substantiate History, and to authenticate facts, which may be liable to be doubted.

These royal and public documents are accompanied with others of a more private character, but all relating to the same body. These also are placed in the same chronological order; and having in view, in like manner, the privileges and liberties of the University, may be considered not less as documents of history, than as statements of the œconomy of the place. Considered all together, they are naturally connected, the latter deriving all their authority from the former; and deserving as distinct an enumeration, if not as minute a detail of particulars.

By Charters are to be understood Instruments written on paper (whence the name) signed or sealed by the granters, and conveying lands and other revenues, privileges, and immunities, or confirming grants already made. They are now more generally applied to the grants of kings and princes; but the term is also used more indiscriminately; for there are Episcopal and more private, as well as Royal, Charters: of similar import are Bulls, except that the latter more commonly relate to Popes, though this word also is of general import. These Royal Charters now have the King's Seal annexed to them, impressed upon wax.*

From this brief account it will appear, that our Privileges will serve as Fasti, or a short Summary of the Annals of the University, being, indeed, more chronologically distinct, and according to its object, more systematically precise, than any historiette in MS. or any printed history. This has been stated in the Address. It may, however, be added here, that it is rather the Fasti of Things than of Persons, 'as Mr. Wood's of Oxford is rather of Persons than Things. Wood's, of course, better serves the purpose of Biography, this of History; and accordingly, in the History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, such particulars have been taken into its biography, as the Oxford Historian throws into his Fasti, and such things as are found here, will come with better authority in their present form.

Subjoined to the Index of all the Charters and other public Instruments is a series of some particular Charters at full length, such no doubt being selected by Dr. Parris, which he deemed the most significant and important.

With respect to the range of our public Instruments, it is hoped it goes high enough: indeed, it goes higher than it will ever be required for any sober use; and low enough for any purpose of elucidation or appeal; the first supposed charter bears the date of April 7, 531, the last of 1683,—so that our chronology embraces a period of no less than 1152 years.

* Ingulphus (Hist. Croyland. inter Rer. Angl. Scriptores, per Gale) says Charters with seals impressed and appended were first introduced here by the Normans: Normanni condemnantes Chirographa Chartas vocabant. But Charters existed some time before, as appears from the early part of his own History. And Dr. Hickes (Dissertatio Epistolaris, p. 5) gives an example of an instrument with a seal annexed, of Edward the Confessor: Normanico ritu Sigillo adpendente munita. Dissert. Epist. p. 64. Edward, therefore, must have introduced this practice at least into Letters before: and to make Ingulphus consistent with himself (for being a Norman, and coming here with William, he must have known when the practice became a custom) we must suppose that the Sigillum or Seal became the regular royal signature from the time of William.—Popes' Seals were Bulle Plumbeæ; whence their name.

One, who acts, as in the present case, only as Editor, must keep to its duties. Indeed, from the very nature of the work, no liberties could have been taken with the originals, either by arranging, or twisting the materials to any private meaning. Some exceptions, however, must be made in behalf of certain things added: for though these matters come within the limits of our dates, and run counter to no Title in our Index, giving only in detail and full length, what appears in our Table in a way only of reference, still they are additions, and a distinct account of them, with some incidental remarks, must be laid before the reader.

The Order then of Edward III. relating to the four Orders of Mendicants, is in Hare's Collection at full length, and so appears in Ayliffe's History of *Oxford, copied most probably from Mr. Hare's Collection of Oxford Charters. In the present volume it is given at full length for the following reasons; 1st, rather for its curiosity, it being written in the Norman French; 2dly, for its relation both to Oxford and Cambridge; 3dly, and principally, for its testimony to the Liberties of our University, proving, as it does, that the English government possessed authorities, when rightly understood and constitutionally exerted, independent of the court and church of Rome.

From that Order, certain conclusions may be drawn, with respect to the papal authority over our Universities in ancient times,—that it was exercised by assumption, and submitted to by sufferance; that it sunk in the scale, in proportion as our kings resumed their regular rights, and were put in their proper place;—the king's authority being paramount;—and, that as the privileges granted by the popes were presumptions, they became encroachments injurious to the liberties both of the town and university, liable, however, even while the Holy See was in the zenith of its power, to be checked by our kings.

* Appendix, Vol. II. p. 22. An account of the dispute, though without the Order, is in Wood's Antiq. Oxon. p. 182, corresponding to what is given of that at Cambridge.

Time was when a Pope's Bull could operate as a charm; or a horror, to all Europe, conferring privileges incalculably great, or inflicting punishments most dreadfully severe; sometimes like a second Venus, giving peace and indulgence not less to universities, than to churches and states; and sometimes towards kings themselves, like the imaginary personages in Æschylus, binding Hercules himself to a rock.*

Here, however, readers may be reminded of a favourite opinion with some, that a Pope's Bull was essential to the foundation of an University, an idea, that is countenanced by a Bull in this volume, p. 71, (of which more in its proper place,) and the allowed usage of the Roman Pontiff: and I recollect, there was a memorable dispute between two learned bodies in Scotland, the University and King's College, and the Mareschal College, Aberdeen. On perusing at King's College, some years ago, the Pope's Bull, relating to its original foundation, it was suggested to me by a gentleman, that the Academia of the Old Town, having the sanction of a Pope's Bull was an University; but, that the Mareschal, in the New, having no Bull, could be only a College: and this seems to be the purport of a passage, which occurs in the course of a dispute, where, after mention made of the Mareschal University, in the New Town, it is added, "if it be a University." Though this Bull, of 1494, in favour of the Old Town, was preceded by the king's request, nor was it erected into a City and University, with the proper privileges, till 1498, by King James IV. However, be these matters as they may, and without sifting too nicely into the language and opinions of those times, we see by the Order of Edward III. introduced in the course of this volume, how these Bulls were understood in England, in his time, when put in competition with the King's constitutional and ancient claims.

More agreeable to English principles is an account subjoined to one of our chroniclers. Sir William Buck claims the title of University for the city of London, so describing it after divers ancient writers, and not figuratively, but literally, and in full force. Our four Inns of Court, with the lesser Inns, appertaining to the Court of Chancery, he designates as Colleges, in the former of which Lectures were delivered, and Degrees conferred. Gresham College, too, no less than other more ancient Schools, and Foundations, he calls, in like manner, Colleges, their conformity to colleges, in discipline and rules being more apparent formerly than now; "for seeing," to use the writer's own words, "that not only those arts, which are called liberal, but also all, or the most part of all, other arts and sciences, proper and fit for ingenuous and liberal persons, were and are in this city professed, taught and studied," he thought the city of London (though its several colleges had not the common bond of a Chancellor) was justly entitled to the name of a University, cum Privilegio Regis: and I have chosen to refer to this writer on account of his challenging the foundation of Universities rather for kings than popes.*

The Imperial Lawyers resolutely maintain, Academiarum auctoritatem ab Imperatoribus esse concessam, and it has been more particularly challenged for the University of Paris, that most ancient University, from which, judging from the similarity of its forms, discipline, and literature, as well as its officers and magistrates, some have concluded that Cambridge itself was derived. The best writers of their history give it a royal origin. They are proud of their Charlemagne. Even when they find it first dignified with a Pope's Bull, confirming its privileges, it had previously * existed, they say, as a University.†

Monsieur Crevier correctly marks this distinction in regard to the University of Paris, a distinction which no less concerns those of Oxford and Cambridge: but though he resolutely maintains the honour of laying the foundation of the University to Charlemagne, in preference of Popes, it is under certain restrictions, that he brings out his conclusion, Il resulte de tout ce que je viens de dire, que Charlemagne doit a juste titre etre regarde comme le premier pere et le premier auteur de l'Universite de Paris. Hist. de Universite de Paris, tom. 7, p. 105. Thus have the French been accustomed to trace their university to the very origin of their monarchy; and even those who do not give its foundation to † These Institutions were so referred to in the German States, as also in Spain and Portugal; and agreeably to what had been done in those countries we may see by one of the documents in this volume (Priv. p. 42) how gallantly Philip of Spain was for giving the honour of founding our University to a Spanish king. The first University that was instituted in Portugal is said to have been founded by Dionysius I. Foi o primeiro que em Portugal instituio huma illustre universade, que trasladada de Lisboa para Coimbra, tem sido ma'i, e creadora de grandissimos ingenhos. Elogios dos Reis de Portugal, &c. p. 73. Their kings also regulated this University. John IV. decreed, that nobody should be admitted to a degree till he was sworn to embrace and defend the immaculate conception da Mãi de Deos, of the Mother of God. Ib. p. 208. We have been for giving the foundation of Oxford University to Alfred, of Cambridge to Sigebert, if not to Arthur, correctly, however, only so far as princes may have founded, or encouraged Schools, and prepared the way for what we now call, Universities.

Charlemagne, still claim for it a royal founder, Philippe Augustus, Louis le Jeune, or Louis le Gros.

In compliance with what readers might probably expect, and other writers had practised, something, perhaps, more than enough, was said in our History of the University, concerning its origin and antiquity. It was shewn, vol. I. p. 139, from Somner's History of Canterbury, that before the period when our authentic charters begin, the word University was applied to different churches united under an Archdeacon. This was a very ancient use of the word. To say nothing of the examples there produced, and of others by M. Crevier, in his Hist. of the University of Paris, all of which are comparatively of modern date (that from Somner being only of the date 1229; those from Crevier of Eugene III. and Adrian IV.): there is a Bull of Pope Sergius I. to the Canons of Pisa, dated 688, where he says, Universitati vestræ stricte precipimus; and another to the Chapter of Pisa, dated 727, in which occurs, Terrorem Universitatis vestræ; one as high as 494, in an Epistle of Gelasius to the Arch-Presbyter of St. Mary's Church at Pisa: Gratias ago Universitati confratrum horum.* Sometimes Universitas vestra simply means all you (vos Universi, as in a Bull of Honorius III. addressed to all the Prelates of Christendom): all these long before our University Records begin. In short the word, being a general term, meant merely Communitas; and, as the latter word is applied in this Table of Privileges, (vid. Compositionem inter Scholares et Burgenses Cantabrigiæ, Priv. p. 80,) to the House of Commons, so is it to the town of Cambridge, (p. 31) in their aggregate body, or corporation, and in contradistinction, Universitas, to the Masters and Scholars, in their aggregate body or Corporation; in like manner as the word Parliament, has several more general meanings in old writers, (see Dufresne's Gloss. sub voce Parliamentum) but all combining in the Commune Concilium Regni Angliæ, that Concilium was called the Parliament of England.*

To the question then, at what period did your University begin? the proper answer would be, when it began to exist as a body, with laws, statutes, magistrates, assemblies, and privileges: to the next, when was that period? the proper reply would be, no one can ascertain. For wherever we choose to make our stand, whether at the diploma of Henry III. (Priv. p. 62) which is undoubtedly authentic, or any which preceded him, that are of doubtful authority, they all suppose the existence of a University, but say nothing of its creation: nor indeed from the meaning of the word, as already stated, does it seem to have been necessary; the word was previously in use, and suited to a literary as well as any other body: so it was insensibly adopted, without annexing to the term any of that charm attached to it in later years. This, however, should be kept in mind, that it was certainly applied to ecclesiastical bodies under an archdeacon, long before it was applied to schools, any further than schools made part of those bodies; for it has been shewn in our His-

* I am here reminded of a mistake of some consequence (in questions relating to the government of the ancient Britons) into which Sir Hen. Spelman has fallen in explaining that passage of Tacitus, "Quod in Commune non consulant," Vit. Agric. s. 12. It is clear from what Tacitus afterwards says, and immediately, that it relates to different states uniting for the common good, and not to separate communities having no public council, as Spelman explains it. This I have noticed in a former publication more at large; I shall just add here, that Tacitus's expression is the same as those which frequently occur in Thucydides; Οὐδ' αὐτοὶ ἀπὸ τῆς ἰσῆς κοινῆς ἑστῆρας συμβούλιον.—Οὐ πολλοὶ φαίνονται συνελθόντες ὡς ἀπὸ πάσης τῆς Ἑλλάδος κοινῇ πεμπόμενοι.—Οὕτω πανταχοῦ ἐν Ἑλλάδι ἐπὶ πολὺν χρόνον κατεχίτο, μᾶτι κοινῇ φανεροὶ μὴδὲν καταργεῖσθαι, κατὰ πόλεις ἀτολμοτέρα εἶναι. Indeed it is a very common form of speech: De Bel. Peloponnes. L. I. A mistake somewhat similar to this Spelman makes in explaining a passage of Cæsar. See Spelman's Gloss. sub voce Parliamentum.

tory of the University and Colleges, that such bodies had schools usually annexed to them.*

Had learned writers correctly marked these distinctions, they might have spared the effusion of much Christian Ink. For in truth, all that Dr. Caius in his famous book de Antiquitate Cantab. says about Schola, Gymnasium, Academia, Studium, Generale Studium, and even Schola Universitatis, and Universitas,† is about moonshine, and like many erudite disputations, where men reason without data, or even understanding their own terms, not worth a straw: one assertion without proof is as good as another; and learned quotations, with mere conjectures, generate only frivolous disputes, and pompous nullities.

But if it be asked, What is now a University? This Book of Privileges will furnish a proper answer. Schools and Universities are different institutions and the difference seems to lie in these particulars. Any one may raise or found a school: and this, according to the success of the teacher, and number of scholars, may flourish, or fade away; so that the school may die with the master, or his learning may, according to circumstances, travel with him from one place to another. A University, on the other hand, besides being a generale studium, in reference to literature, as Dr. Caius explains it, has its settled endowments, its public laws, its distinct officers, and established magistrates, its regular degrees and privileges, its permanent Rector or Chancellor;‡ combining, among us, together various smaller Corporations, or Colleges, in one larger Corporation; and all,—dropping now the Papal claims,—under the sanction of the Royal authority. But we have wandered a little: so we return to our Order of Edward III.

Having disposed of the term University, and having elsewhere settled the meaning of the term College, it is obvious to observe, that the present colleges were incorporated by royal power, and on that depended for what was essential and fundamental: still while popery was the religion of this country, the Roman pontiff also had his distinct powers in English as well as in foreign colleges, that professed the Catholic faith: he added his confirmation, he gave indulta, he bestowed privileges, he interfered in their livings, their discipline, and statutes. Thus we find our first college, that of St. Peter, was founded by a Charter of Edward I. (1274) still it was confirmed by Pope Radolphus:—in like manner there is a Statute of Mortmain by Edward III., containing the Charter of Foundation of Pembroke Hall, similar to that of Emmanuel College, and others founded since the abolition of popery in this country; still there is a supplication from the Foundress for a Bull, and there are other Bulls interfering in the œconomy of that house.*—And the Pope, who could do so many other things, certainly talked in his Bulls of giving the power of erecting Universities.

In truth, the Pontiff had, by degrees, so presumed on the claims of the Holy See, as to absorb in them all other authorities. He portioned out territories newly discovered, and set their boundaries * (as did Alexander VI.); he de-throned and excommunicated kings; he disposed of their dominions, and interdicted their subjects. By the power of the keys he opened the gates of heaven and hell. So great was the force of a Bull, it made every thing give way. Our king John yielded his kingdom and all to it, though he set out with making at first † a just distinction between civil and religious subjection: and, on the other hand, Henry VIII., who at length stripped the pope of every claim in this kingdom, had two years before acknowledged the power of the keys, ‡ and by virtue of that power it was that the pope had settled on that monarch the title of Defender of the Faith.

* Pope Urban's and Innocent's Bulls for a Chapel and Belfry.—Pope Nicholas's, interpreting the Statute of Election of Master, for leave to take any, that is not, or ever was, Fellow.—Pope Clement's for the Appropriation of Sydney.—Similar to that of Pope Nicholas for the Election of a Master of this College, was one of the Pope for re-electing the Rector of the University of Paris, who had been deprived by the University. The Bulls relating to this body correspond exactly with those, which relate to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. Vid. Crevier Hist. de Universite de Paris, Appendix.

Still we must keep in mind, and to that point the present matter is bearing, the difference between a constitutional right, and an assumed claim. It was agreeable to natural justice, as well as to ancient custom and the law of England, (which is what we mean by Constitution), that kings should encourage literature, that they should found or protect schools and colleges in this country; but by popes the order of things was reversed, when they interfered in the regulation of them.. The prince's act was that of the civil magistrate; a matter of internal discipline, exhibiting a just principle of political œconomy; the pope's the interference of a foreign † Bene, inquit, reor, quod dominus Papa meus est Pater Spiritualis, et quod vicem gerit beati Petri, et illi debeo obedire, scilicet in spiritualibus; at in terrenis, quæ coronæ meæ pertinent, nequaquam. This is said to the Pope's legate, Radulph.—John, however, afterwards resigned to the Pope by charter, "totum regnum nostrum Angliæ, et totum nostrum regnum Hiberniæ." *Annales Monast. ecclesiastical power, implying something of religious, and, indeed, of civil submission, amounting even to a feudatorial subjection, not congenial to the English Constitution, as being never allowed and settled by the law of the land: though indeed, even long after the Reformation, the more zealous papists thought the English Universities would be brought back to their old faith, and that the authority of the Holy See was essential to the re-establishment of our Universities.*

Thus, then, in the production of these extraordinary Institutions two great powers were in motion, which, during a certain period, seemed, yet only seemed, to move in a parallel direction, without interfering (except occasionally, and on some emergencies,) with each other. But power always tends to encroachment; and, for the most part, that which has least right, is most presuming. Never were words penned with such insolence, as that form given by Pope Innocentius to King John. But when the just claim comes, with its natural and legal support, the false gives way. Thus it proved in the present case: These two powers continued occasionally to recede, and occasionally to approximate, till at length, like evanescent qualities, they were considered as one, in the person of Henry VIII.

Whether, now, it be agreeable to sound policy, that the civil and ecclesiastical power should exist in one and the same organ, or should, rather, be vested in authorities different and independent of each other, is not the question here:—though were I considering, instead of facts, an abstract question, I should certainly decide in favour of the principles of Milton and Locke, in preference to those of

* Accordingly in A Memorial for the Reformation of England, (MS.) drawn up in 1596 by one who believed that this country would, at a future period, be brought back to popery, it is laid down as a first principle in regard to Universities, "that there must be a commission and facultye, of such as come to reform, ample and large, both from the Realme and See-Apostolic."

Mr. Hooker and Bishop Warburton.*—But I am now speaking of fact, not of right. And it is a fact, that civil and ecclesiastical power existed in one and the same organ, till the time of William the Conqueror, when a separation was first made of the ecclesiastical from the civil courts.† Among our early ancestors, while yet in Germany, the maxim had been, de majoribus omnes, all (i. e. the whole legislature) determined on greater matters; and among the greater matters—we may be sure—would be reckoned, when they came here, and were christians, such things as related to the church: from indisputable testimonies, indeed, it appears, that civil and ecclesiastical matters were regulated in the same court here, both among the Britons and Saxons.‡ Here the clergy and laity formed one court, and the king presided; and he, with the clergy and laity, formed one legislature. It deserves notice, too, that even the bishops, * Compare Milton's Treatises on Government, and Locke's on Government and Toleration, with Hooker's first and eighth Books of Ecclesiastical Polity, and Warburton's second book, c. 3, 4, of Alliance between Church and State. I have elsewhere remarked, and it is worthy of being remarked again, that Mr. Locke's Treatises on Government are founded on Hooker's excellent first Book of Ecclesiastical Polity, on the Nature of Law. I have quoted, too, in the same place, and it is worthy of being quoted again, the following observation of Milton: "Primò homines, ut tute et libere sine vi et injuriis vitam agerent, convenere in CIVITATEM, ut sancte et religiose, in ECCLESIAM: illa leges, hæc disciplinam, habet suam, plane diversam. Hinc toto orbe Christiano per tot annos bellum ex bello seritur, quod MAGISTRATUS et ECCLESIA inter se officia confundunt." Miltoni Def. pro Pop. Angl.

at their ordination, in the Saxon times, were not sworn to subjection to the Roman pontiff,* however orthodox they were obliged to be in doctrinal matters. Hence it follows, when the civil magistrate arrived at the point just alluded to, that, so far as matters of discipline went, he arrived at his ancient, if not his proper, place; that he acted in violation of no constitutional authority, of no acknowledged claim, but rather in perfect consistency with the prerogative and ancient rights of the kings of England: hence, too, it follows, that when Edward III. issued this order against the authority of the Pope's Bulls in our English Universities, whether they are considered as ecclesiastical or civil institutions, that he acted constitutionally, that is, agreeably to old English custom and law. If our Universities were ecclesiastical institutions, the pope, whatever authority he might ground on the Canon law, possessed none, that was owned by the law of the land; if as civil, and our Universities are now considered Lay-Corporations,† the king stood in the same relation to them, as he does to all other civil Corporations.

But it is, likewise, worthy of notice, that this Order of Edward III., which has led to the above remarks, is worded in the most exact, decisive, legislative manner, not as an act simply royal, but as one of the whole English government, ecclesiastical not less than civil. So that by this act the authority of the pope in our Universities, however it might be left occasionally to operate, was in fact cancelled for the time in a tone as full and authoritative in the University, as it was, afterwards, through the land, at that more splendid period, which we call the Reformation, under Henry VIII.: in speaking of which period, indeed, we must learn to distinguish. We may approve the principle of separation from the Roman See, yet not, altogether and implicitly, the practice which ensued. To make a thing straight, which was before crooked, it is expedient that it should not only be forced into a deflection, but be brought into a right line; else, though the direction may be altered, the line will be crooked still. So far as Henry united, in any of his measures, with the whole legislature, (as in the above order, de l'assent des prelatz, ducs, counts, et barons, &c.) he may be said to have acted right. But when he wrote (for he was himself a great writer of such things) and issued, proclamations, or injunctions, potestate regali, (merely by his royal authority) and gave them the force of law; when he ruled (as he did for many years) without parliaments; when he appeared (so he has been described) as a king with a pope in his belly, without the assent of bishops, lords, or commons, then he acted the politico-theological farcical part of a Janus, not the sober one of a politico-regal king of England.*

* This is evident from an English Pontifical, (in Archbishop Parker's MSS. in Bene't College) which contains the examination of a bishop at his ordination. The bishop promises to teach the people out of the scriptures, in the discharge of his duty as bishop: he also professes his belief in the Trinity. But there is not a syllable about obedience to the Roman Pontiff, which the bishops at a subsequent period were obliged to swear.

Another distinction should be made; for subjects of this kind involve no question of truth, metaphysically or theologically considered, but of national independence, and political expedience, relating to public, not to private religion: these, indeed, may assist and support each other, but do it only occasionally, and, as it were, by accident, not by a necessary reciprocity, or any uniform sympathy of nature; on the contrary, like two powers, of equal force, moving in opposite directions, they often interrupt and destroy each others' operations: and that public and private religion are distinct, and therefore may have very different tendencies, is clearly taught both by political and theological writers.*

Here, too, it must not escape the reader, that I am not examining an abstract question on the nature, extent, and utility of Literary Corporations, in general, but merely stating the fact of their existence. Were I examining an abstract question, I should be bound to hold the balance of comparison. All corporations must possess certain proprieties highly favourable to those whom they concern: and a question then arising, whether local improvements, partial progress, and particular interests, are in harmony with general advancement, and public utility, I might, perhaps, have two or three ideas, which I do not think it necessary to introduce into the present statement.

The legislative interference, with respect to the papal authority, during this reign, was not confined to the Universities: for besides the law against the Pope's Bulls, passed in their favour, others passed relating to appeals, investitures, provisors, and other branches of the popish usurpation: and these were followed by other laws to the same purport under Richard II., Henry IV., and Henry V.;

* To Bishop Warburton's and Dr. Paley's distinction between public and private religion I have alluded before.—Semler, a learned German critic, writing merely as a Christian and theologian, says "De hoc igitur mihi satis persuasum habeo, *Catholicam ecclesiam curasse tantum societatem externam suorum civium: nec intercedo: non abnuo: jure sic egit cum omnibus qui ipsi consentiebant; sed iniquè egit, quod privatæ religionis, quam publica religio unice adjuvare et promovere creditur, libertatem illis non concessit, qui Christiano jure jam ipsi uti et vivere vellent, quia sic se vivere posse intelligebant."*

D. Jo. Salem Semleri Novæ Observationes, &c: Hale. The old popish doctrine is horrible, considered either in a moral and religious, or political point of view. In the popish countries of Europe, the public Catholic religion had long trampled upon all private, whether Jewish or Christian; and in Spain even Goths and Saracens were more tolerant of the private religion both of Jews and Christians, than the ruling parties before had been towards each other. See Claude's Hist. Reform. in France, part 3, chap. 3; together with his Groans of the French Protestants, and Mr. Robinson's Ecclesiastical Researches, Ch. IX. of the Church of Spain.

but as these latter were often overruled, and Bulls from Rome admitted, through the king's pardon, or even by his licence; so in our Universities, as it should seem, this order relating to Bulls was rather provisional than final (hence our vague manner of speaking elsewhere): for, whether it was, that this act was considered only as a temporary expedient, or gave way through the weakness of the royal power, or was even made with a proviso for the royal licence, whatever the cause, the law was not permanent. For after this king's order, we find Bulls granted both to private Colleges, and the University. It remained, then, for Henry VIII. to give them the final blow.

And, whatever Henry's motives were, his plea was good, and his arguments conclusive; supported, as we have seen, by the constitution of his country. A table of some of his public acts relating to the University will be found in this volume, and one concerning the Public Orator, at full length. It seems, too, worthy of notice here, that the king ordered every College to send in all its Grants, Charters, Statutes, and Bulls, which has already been noticed in our History of the University; and, further, that though he returned the Charters, it does not appear that he returned the Bulls. This is mentioned again, (and it will be found noticed in this Book of Privileges) because, probably, it may be assigned as a reason, why in the Table there appear so few Bulls.

Should it be thought by any reader, that the observations made above are more than were called for in this place, he should be reminded, that we have been talking of remote times, and of our old English government; that points of antiquity must be illustrated by testimony, and questions about claims by appeals to prescription and ancient laws; that we have been speaking of times, when our Universities and government, as well as those of all Europe, had for many centuries been entangled with the Roman court, as in a web, which it is no easy matter to unravel: all this should be recollected. But England had been called only the adopted child of the Roman church: and, having been the last European power in submitting to the Roman yoke, she became the first that threw it off. Our British king Lucius (though only one of Tacitus's Reguli, not the king of Britain in the sense represented by some writers, as already noticed,) is said to have been the first Christian king in Europe, and had been called, by king Eleutherius himself, the Vicar of Christ, Vicarius Dei, in Regno Dei (if we allow any authority to that testimony): the kings had never been feudatory to the Romish see,* as other Europeans were: hence Bracton says, for it is in reference to this he is speaking, Parem non habet Rex Angliæ in Regno suo; multo fortius nec superiorem: and if this be enumerated among the Jura Majestatis of the kings of England, as matter of precedence of other states, Alma Mater must be allowed to come in for a share of the honour.

This act of Edward III., though not the first addition in the order of the volume, is introduced the first here, on account of its significancy, and relation to the authority on which this University at present rests. The reflections upon them almost insensibly stole upon my mind; and they are placed before the reader not without design. They may serve partly for elucidation, and partly for congratulation: for elucidation, as pointing out the distinct provinces of kings and popes in the creation or establishment of Universities and Colleges; of congratulation, for the shadow of liberty is to be preferred to the solemnities of usurpation: and with respect to what has been said of Henry VIII., and whatever readers may think of him, it must be more agreeable to an English University to receive privileges through the medium of its own civil government, than of a foreign ecclesiastical despotism.

This first addition was made to shew its excellence, a few other additions, on which we are next to remark, to prove their inauthenticity. And, previously, let us concede, that whatever may hereafter appear, no blame can attach to the present generation, none even to the leaders of the Reformation, who settled our Universities, as they now exist. For though the leaders of the Reformation have been charged with devastations, dilapidations, and enriching themselves with the spoils of the dissolved monasteries,* forging writings was the invention of an earlier period. And, perhaps, the men of that age may find a parallel in the history of man. Besides, are we sure, from what we know of the different sects, that any other, living in the same ages of darkness, supported with equal pretensions, and backed by an immense power, like that of the court and church of Rome, would have acted better? But more of these matters in another place.

The next addition, then, which I have made, is the Charter of king Arthur. Privileges, p. 55.

My original has the titles only, but the Charters and Bulls are in Hare's Collections, and in the Black Book; they are also subjoined, with the Historiola de Antiq. Cantab., to Sprotti Chronica (though it does not follow, that Mr. Hearne, the editor, believed them genuine), and are reprinted in Parker's History of Cambridge. What has been said of their inauthenticity in our History of the University, may be considered rather as negative, than positive arguments. Dr. Caius considered them as authentic, so did Dr. Fuller, at least some of them; though he follows, principally, the authorities of Rosse and Caius.* Archbishop Parker, too, perhaps, might receive them,† though he begins his Munimenta with Henry III.

There are two copies of Mr. Hare's Collections, the Vice Chancellor's, and Registrar's; what his opinion of the suspected Charters and Bulls, contained in them, was, does not appear from either; Mr. Baker, Dr. Ashton, and Dr. Parris thought them all forgeries. Still this is opinion against opinion; and opinions without arguments, are but negative proofs; and not being aware that any of our Cantabrigians have gone formally into the subject, yet having spoken freely of these ancient writings in the History of Cambridge, I think it both in place and character to give reasons of a more positive nature, why I consider both Bulls and Charters no genuine instruments: otherwise, it may be supposed, that I spoke flippantly, or from mere petulancy. It is proper, too, that things of this kind should sometimes be sifted; and the thoughts which arise on them are often of use in other questions besides those which are the immediate object of them. So to proceed to the first of these Charters, that of King Arthur.

It might first be observed, that the account of Arthur, as given by Geoffry of Monmouth, and other monkish chroniclers, is, in the judgment of many, not merely fabulous in parts, but an entire fable throughout: he is not once mentioned by Bede, and therefore not in the Saxon Chronicle; which is somewhat extraordinary, Bede living so near his time: but, not to insist on that, yet, at the same time, leaving the embellishments of Geoffry to poetry, we think the middle opinion of William of Malmesbury more akin to true history, viz. "This is that Arthur, of whom so many British absurdities, and to this day, are wantonly advanced, of a man worthy of not having fallacious fables dreamt about him, but of the report of true history, as being one, who long supported his falling country, and sharpened the unbroken minds of citizens to war.”*

Nennius’s† account of him, too, only supposes he was one of those powerful leaders among the British kings, who eminently distinguished himself by his valiant resistance of the Saxons.

Now, it not being pretended, that either this Charter, or the others in the Black Book, are originals, but only copies, their authenticity must be inquired into not by the shape of the letters, abbreviations, subscriptions, or seals, and such-like other canons of criticism, by which originals, claiming a particular age, are examined. Other rules must be adopted. Let us, then, examine, whether they can, possibly, be transcripts of original manuscripts, from which, if they mean anything, they must profess to be derived.

Our old chroniclers, who mention Arthur, fix the beginning of his reign, A. D. 516.—Now, is the stile of this Charter, that of his age? Suppose of Gildas, who flourished in 495. To do the writer of this Charter justice, it is superior. Was Lucius‡ ever King of Britain, in the sense which this writing supposes? Is not the language of it, speaking of exemptions from tributes and burdens, the very language of the middle ages? Could ever monk or gaping clerk speak more appositely? Rectori Scholarium—was not that the language of a much later period? *—These, and other questions might be asked, on the terms of this Charter. But our old chroniclers (the Saxon Chronicle more particularly), and after them Stow, place the coming of Augustine into this island, A. D. 596, “being sent by Pope Gregory, to preach the gospel to the Angels (Angles, English).” † Now, for certain, Christianity (whether introduced first by Peter, or Paul, or Joseph of Arimathea, no matter) existed here long before, yet unconnected with the Apostolical See, at least not subject to it. The letter of Pope Eleutherius, dated a Nativitate, vel a Passione, (for different copies read it differently) Christi 169, addressed to Lucius, King of Britain, (said to be the first Christian king of Europe) could, at most, be only one of the Reguli, or little princes, among whom Britain was divided: and many suppose the whole letter to be a forgery: and “vicarius vero estis in Regno,” with other expressions, favours the opinion: but, should it be allowed to be genuine (which would be allowing a great deal), that very sentence (though the letter breathes an air of pontifical solemnity), would be enough to shew that Eleutherius could never dream either of civil or ecclesiastical subjection: and the celebrated answer ‡ of the Abbot of Bangor,* to the demand of Augustine, disavowing any subjection to Rome, proves that it could not then be known in the island. What then shall we say of a Charter, coming with a Licentia sedis Apostolicæ, dated A. D. 531?

Selden (Janus Anglorum, p. 52,) says, that Leland asserted, he saw in the Church of Westminster, Arthur's Seal; but, if I understand him right, he seems to doubt it: and the idle tale of Arthur shews it to be not genuine; nor is it said to have been a Charter. "That the English had seals from the Saxons," adds Selden, in the same page, "is beyond a doubt." Dr. Hickes, too, had thoroughly explored the archives of the Church of Westminster, and as he refers the introduction of seals to the Saxons, and gives his testimony in favour of what he deems the most ancient Charter, I do not know, that we can follow better authority. He says, Septimum erat sæculum, in quo Chartæ ab Anglosaxonibus primum fieri cæperunt, aut tum ab eorum aliquo factæ fuisse ullo auctore traduntur. Extant vero, quæ VII into sæculo, et deinceps confectæ erant vetustissimæ, scilicet Charta Ethelberti I. regis Cantwarum, omnium antiquissima, &c. Epist. Familiaris, p. 79. Nor do I find that Dr. Hickes, either here, or elsewhere, attempts to produce any example of a British Charter.

So, to cut the matter short—Charters were not even known here at that period. Ingulphus's account would fix their introduction at the distance of several centuries; but Dr. Hickes and Selden, we see, both maintain they were first introduced by the Saxons. And Arthur, fully employed in fighting against the Saxons, was not likely to get Charters from them. As Dr. Hickes maintains the first genuine Charter in this country was of the seventh century, so does Mr. Ruddiman,† in his preface to Anderson's Diplomata Scotiæ, suppose that Charters were introduced in Scotland about the same period.

The reader will please to notice what I shall presently say on the word Script.

Another evidence of inauthenticity, worth noticing here, is similar to that pointed out by Dr. Hicke, in a Charter falsely ascribed to Edward the Confessor. He observes, all Charters had either a sign, or seal (as after the Conquest): but, adds he, of Edward the Confessor's Charter, "Huic vero Chartæ insulse legitur nomen regis nudum absq. ullo signo sive sigillo his verbis; ego Eadwardus, &c." This will apply to our Charter: and, though it professes to be only a copy, yet, has it not the usual formality, or intimation, that there ever had been any signature of any kind.

The next Charter (p. 56) is entitled Privilegium Cadwaldi, &c. He begins with calling himself Rex totius Britannia; King of all Britain. Now all Britain, Magna Britannia, called Albion, extended from Kent (Cantium), to the extreme of Calidonia (Scotland), even passing the Roman Walls, and included all the interjacent country, eastward and westward.* What can be made, then, of this sounding title, Rex totius Britannia? Gildas, Nennius, and Richard, the monk of Westminster, throw a little light on this, totally inconsistent with the idea of any one's being, at that time, King of all Britain, otherwise than as Generalissimot, which is not the officer held out here.

* Ricardi Monachi Westmonast. de Situ Britannia, l. i. c. ii, iii. vi. Britain had been divided into thirty-three cities, (civitates, so left by the Romans) independent of each other. This subject is well treated of in Turner's Hist. of the Anglos. vol. 1, B. 1. c. 8.

† Squire on the English Constitution, p. 252, ed. 1753. Asser calls Ceadwalla, Rex occidentaliū Saxonū only, p. 147, Gale: and Egbert, King of the West Saxons, 133 years after, was the first called Rex totius Angliæ, Hist. Angl. Norman. p. 230, notes, Maseres. Why Higden calls him Rex Britonū, et Rex Occident. Sax. vid. Polychron. L. 5, p. 243, Gale. My argument does not require me to notice Nennius's, Lucius Britannicus Rex cum universis Regulis totius Britannia, &c. some 100 years before the Heptarchy.

We have, in this Charter, the same anachronisms of language as before, except that the writer more boldly uses Rectori (the very word used for the Chancellor in after-times) instead of Rectoribus; the same talking about former privileges; the notorious story of Cambridge being founded by Cantaber, &c.; of exemptions, which were not granted till many centuries after, and allusions to Charters, given many centuries before Charters were known to exist in this island, with a little aping of the language of the 6th and 7th centuries, Pontifices, Reguli, and Principes; Regulis, too, is unfortunately introduced in Britain, after the division of the Saxon Heptarchy, with Rex totius Britanniae.* Of the year 681, or 685, (no matter which) let it be observed, that some chroniclers fix the beginning of Cadwalla's reign in 685, and his death in 683; the date, therefore, as it is in the Black Book must be false. Dr. Cairns alters the date to 685; but on what authority? And by what could a king of the West Saxons confer these Privileges on a University in the East Angles?

We next come to Edward III.'s Charter (priv. p. 57.) Probable it is, and almost certain, if Edward gave this Charter, he gave it in the Saxon language, and for the following reasons: this (the real English) was the vernacular language * Tota Britannia, according to the Saxon divisions in England, could only be parts of Wales and Cornwall. According to the Sax. Chronicle, Cadwall resumed his government in 685, and died at Rome in 689. Vide Sax. Chron. pp. 46, 47, Gibson. No one could then properly be called Rex totius Britanniae, nor at the time of William the Conqueror; and even then, the usual title in public instruments, is, Rex Anglorum, or Rex Angliae, as it had been in the time of the Saxons.

Rex Totius Britanniae, indeed, occurs some years between, viz. even in what are called Edward the Confessor's Laws; but, these, as appears from the Norman-Latin style, with the explication of Saxon terms, were made up in a later period, and, therefore, what relates to Arthur, and other kings, could not be made use of for any serious purpose. See Ll. Anglosax. Wilkins, p. 197. And that the reader may not take my mere word, let him hear what the learned Dr. Hickes says, leges Edwardi regis, non eas Latine scriptas, quas falsarius aliquis interpolavit, Dissertatio Epist. p. 43. How, and in what sense Alfred became totius Angliae primus Monarcha, (as in Ordericus Vitalis, in Hist. Ang. edited by Baron Maseres,) see the Baron's note, p. 236.

of his times, and very few of the natives understood a word of Latin. Alfred's and Elfric's testimony (unexceptionable evidence) have been already given on this point. And so it appears from Peter of Blois' (Gale's Script. Angl. V. I. p. 114,) Account of the Monks, who came from Orleans, and taught the sciences in a barn at Cambridge. Edward's laws, and other public instruments, with those of the several English kings, to the time of the Conquest, were, therefore, given in Saxon. For, though it is true, as Sir H. Spelman observes; that the church had been accustomed to give its Canons commonly in Latin, (as the sæcular power its laws, in the vernacular tongue,)* yet that practice had now ceased, through the ignorance of the Latin. Ingulph tells us, that all the Charters that had been in Croyland Monastery, were in Saxon. And the learned Dr. Hickes assigns it as a strong proof of a Charter's being forged, which yet was ascribed to Edward the Confessor, that it was written in the Norman, or Roman characters; whereas, the Saxon characters were used in Charters, even till after the Conquest.† It is, therefore, probable, I say, if Edward gave this Charter, that it was given in English. On the other hand, had it been a translation, he who made it, would, for obvious reasons, have said so.

Further, had there been such a public instrument as this, it would, probably, have been recorded in some Chronicle; the monkish chroniclers notice some Charters and Grants of our Saxon kings, (with some of these historians, it was a favourite employment :) and to have noticed Edward's raising the Muses in their dejected state at Grentabridge, would have added another gem to the crown of our heroic prince. In the Chronicle of Melross, we read that Edward ordered (A. 916) the wall of the town of Bedford to be built on the southern side of the Ouse: he was, then, probably, at Bedford in 916, and though so near to poor Cambridge, we read there of nothing that he said or did, A. 915, in its behalf. We hear of no appeals, as in cases already mentioned, to records in the Tower, nor to the Fœdera of Rymer, who has copied most of our authentic Cambridge Charters. A testimony from any of these quarters would have carried some authority. But no—this Charter is to be found only in our unlucky Black Book: it is copied by Hearne, as it occurs in NICHOLAI CANTALUPI HISTORIO-OLA; and on this prop only it rests.

In the style of this Charter, as we now have it, there are several features, that deserve notice. “Edward, by the Grace of God,” &c. though not the regular formality in our Saxon kings’ Charters, and Laws, as it occurs at the front of Ina’s Laws, (it became more usual after the Conquest) may pass: still those who have read of the complete destruction made by the Danes among the East Angles, of Monasteries, MSS. Bulls, and Charters, and of the subsequent barbarism, from before the time of Alfred to the time of Ingulphus, may be surprized to hear of a Mater Philosophiæ, with all the formalities and officers of a University, (indesinenter) a Chancellor, Doctors, Scholars, and servientibus, (whose privileges were conferred some centuries after) those persons, I say, may be surprized. A Chancellor too! before the name of Chancellor came in use; the principal officer of the University, as well in Oxford and Cambridge, as Paris, was Rector.* The names of the peculiar officers, and the privileges granted, the disputes and cabals, and the course of studies, were much the same in all, and came in at each place at no great distance of time, a circumstance worth noticing,† for it throws light on the history of each University. Baker, our Cambridge antiquary, observes, the first time he meets with the name of Chancellor, was in 1246, though it will appear, that * Baker, Wood, Crevier.

† Compare, on this subject, Crevier’s Hist. de l’Universite de Paris, Appendix, with Wood’s Hist. and Antiq. Oxon. and Hare’s Index and Charters.

Hare found it 16 years earlier;* and if I may venture an opinion, it was probably first used at Cambridge, at the beginning of Henry III.'s reign. What favours this opinion, is, that in this reign our literary body was brought into something of university order. Then was entrusted to its principal officer a portion of forensic, judicial authority, though it did not settle, till many years afterwards, into the formalities of a regular court.

It should seem, then, that the word Chancellor is a generic term, like that of University; and its name probably came into use with the appointment of the Rector to a new office. The date of this Charter is 915, and the beginning proclaims, Præcepto Johannis, Apostolicæ sedis Episcopo. Now, some Chronicle makes John Pope, not till 918; Bellarmine, not till 916; either way, there is a false date, and in an instrument of this kind, this is a strong presumption that it was forged. Observe further, that in the first accounts of Charters in ancient Chronicles, these distinctions are preserved; "Hi sunt testes qui adfuerunt, quiq. ei subscripserunt: cum suis digitis subscripserunt Christi crucem, et confirmabant cum," &c. or something of this kind. The same formalities were not uniformly preserved, but some usually were: and observe what Dr. Hickes says, Verum inito octavo sæculo, eove haud multum promotum, inde, signandis chartarum temporibus, ad annum indictionis annus Dominicæ Incarnationis frequentius jam tum usitatus accepit.

There is another feature in this Charter, that can escape no one; its style. Hume observes of Edward, "Though he equalled his father (Alfred) in military talents, he was inferior to him in knowledge and erudition." Yet, surely, he had common sense—and would any man with a grain of sense say of his Charter, "Rata decerno durare quamdiu vertigo poli terras ac æquora circa æthera siderum justo mo- deramine voverit! Such a vertigo could only be in the brains of a monk; and, doubtless, the priest laughed at his own conceits.

* See Hist. Univers. and Coll. Vol. I. p. 60.

For the reasons, then, above-mentioned, with all due deference to better judgments, I cannot believe, that the afore-said Charters are authentic instruments.

Thus far, concerning our three first Royal Charters: let us next consider the Bulls; and I suspect, here, also, will be found as much anomaly of matter, and anachronism of style, as before. The first Bull is that of Honorius I. (Vide Privileges, p. 58.) Whether, by Pagani, the writer means Romans, Picts and Scots, or the first adventurers of the Saxons, is of little consequence. Certain it is, there was no University and Chancellor here at the time, as this Bull holds out. Observe, too, we have here a succession of Bishops of Rome, who granted privileges to this University, in the following order, Elutherius, Fabian, Leo, Simplicius, Felix, and Boniface. Now, according to Bellarmine, the order of succession proceeded thus; Elutherius, Fabian, Felix I. and II. Boniface, Leo, Simplicius.* We have, also, here, an exemption granted the University, from Archbishops', Bishops', and Archdeacons' Courts. Now, the exemption from the Bishop of Ely's Court, and the Archdeacon's, was not till 1276, and was procured by Hugh Balsham, Bishop of Ely, founder of Peter House: and this, as well as founding a College, is mentioned among the praises of that Bishop.† This date will be found in p. 8, of the present volume. If it be said, this Bull is the foundation of Balsham's Grant to the University: Why, then, was it not so stated, as the usual practice in such cases was, in the Bishop's composition?‡

* Bellarmini Chronologia, sub Finem Libri, de Eccles. Scriptoribus.

† See further, Bentham's Hist. of the Convential and Cathedral Church of Ely, p. 150, first edition, as already quoted in the Hist. of Cambridge. Yet Platina and others, who have written about the Popes, at least, as far as I have examined, do not notice it.

‡ It may be seen at large in Fuller's Hist. of the Univ. of Camb. p. 22, at the end of his Church History.

But, as before observed, no University, with a Rector, existed at the time of Honorius. The Bull further intimates, that Honorius was a student in the University, when young: now does it seem reasonable to suppose, that Honorius, when a boy, should be sent from Italy, in the 7th century, to be a student at Cambridge?

But further, Cancellarius cum Rectoribus:—we have here two misnomers. All writers on Universities allow a Rector was one, not many, Rectores: and what this writer means by Rectores, we shall uniformly find called, in this volume, Doctores, Magistros; the first title of a head of the College at Cambridge, was Custos; Rectores were Rectores Ecclesiarum.*

Two things are observable in the date: first script., when we might have expected, in an authentic Bull, Dat. In all the genuine Charters, in this volume, this distinction is preserved, except where Teste me, (a formality, which came in use before the time of Hen. III.) or Literas nostras fieri fecimus patentes, or, the Sigillum Domini Regis apponitur, as after, and in continuance from the Conquest; and sometimes, Dat. per manum nostram; but it does not appear that Script. was put in the place of Data.

This distinction, too, if I mistake not, is usually made, in genuine bulls, except, where acta sunt may be given, a word synonymous to Dat., or Data and Acta both together. It is preserved in a course of many genuine Bulls, of different dates, that I have read, given to the Canonry of St. Martin, at Pisa.† The reason of this distinction appears in one of the dates; Dat. Laterani a salutis 729, scripta per manum Benedicti Scromarii. It was not the office of the King or Pope, scribere, but of their Notary, Chaucellor, Master of the Rolls, or the like. Whether the word script., as the instrument passed through an officer's hands, may have been sometimes put by mistake, is more than I can say: I meet with it in two or three Bulls in Will. of Malmesbury. I observe, further, that the date of the king's reign, or of the Pope's advancement to the Pontificate, is usually put, but is left out in the two first Bulls; the third has it. Finally, the date itself is incorrect, 624; whereas, Bellarmine gives the date of Honorius's advancement to the Pontificate, 626.

* Rectores Ecclesiarum was used, in the middle ages, nearly in the same sense in which it is now.

I have read a Charter of Pope Sergius, with Universitas vestra, as in this; but in the former case, there is no anomaly either of style or date. Universitati vestræ stricte precipimus, in the former, is applied to the Chapter of Canons, &c. belonging to St. Martin's, at Pisa; and the date has all the formalities, *Dat. Laterani Pontificatus Nostri A. 2.**

Dr. Fuller, speaking of Mr. Twyne, of Oxford, who had noticed this false date, calls it a pretended detection, finding Honorius sitting in the Papal Chair at the time, in writers of undeniable authority: but, with submission, I think the date of Bellarmine is more likely to be correct, as being made on examination, after theirs, than either Matthew of Westminster's, or Platina's.

But Dr. Fuller further thinks, this Bull ought not to be considered spurious, merely on account of a false date. But, with submission, I think a false date a most material consideration. For admitting, as we already have, that this Bull is a copy only, and not an original, and that the original might be burnt by the Danes, (and if not then, in the reign of Edward II. when all their Charters and Bulls were burnt,) still, if it professes to be any thing, it must be that it is copied from an original. Is it probable, that an original, coming from such high authority, and going on such a great errand, and subject, no doubt, to the inspection or revision of different officers, would come out with a false date? Or, that if it was copied from an original, that the copyist would not have been exact in the date; seeing that the Ostensio Chartæ or Bullæ was to be a legal instrument of so much consequence?

* Our observations on Sergius's Bull to Camb. University, will be at the end of our second volume.

Previously to the learned Doctor's remark on the date, he quotes at large Bishop Balsham's composition, already alluded to, sua auctoritate, settling, as bishop of the diocese, the distinct offices of the University, as well as himself and Archdeacon, in which he says, both of the Chancellor of the University, and the Archdeacon, ut constet utrumque nobis immediatè esse subjectum. Here the Doctor, in his accustomed mixt strain of wit and seriousness, (in allusion to some of the good bishop's concessions) asks, How durst the Bishop of Ely, notwithstanding the premises, interpose his power in university-matters? Is it not ridiculous for the man to pretend bounty, in bestowing a remnant on him to whom his master had formerly given the whole piece? What bounty was it in this bishop to exempt Cambridge partly from Archdeaconal, which Popes so long before had privileged from Episcopal, Jurisdiction?*

These three questions may be replied to, by asking three other questions. Is it not probable, that Hugh de Balsham was the devoted servant to the Pope, and the Apostolical See? Was he not confirmed in the bishopric of Ely by him in direct opposition both to the king, and Archbishop of Canterbury, each of whom had been violent in behalf of another claimant? Electus (per priorem et conventum Eliensum) Nov. 1256, sed quia tunc a rege et Bonifacio, Archiepiscopo, cassata erat electio, ad curiam Romanam appellavit, ubi fuit confirmatus prid. non: Octobris ab Alexandro Quarto 1257, a quo etiam fuit consecratus prid. id: Octobris ejusdem anni." Lib. Eliens. Baker; as quoted in Richardson's Godwin, notes, p. 256. Is it not, then, probable, that Balsham attached no consequence whatever to the Bull defended by Dr. Fuller?

I think, then, with submission, that Honorius's and Sergius† I.'s Bulls have evident marks of inauthenticity: let us try Pope John's.

* Hist. of the University of Cambridge, p. 25.

† The remarks on the Bull of Pope Sergius I. will be given at the end of Vol. II.

Mr. Parker supposes this Bull—Pro Confirmatione Universitatis Cantabrigie—to have been given by Pope * John the Tenth, and, of course, he must further suppose the king, alluded to in it, was Edward the Elder. Now John the Tenth (according to Bellarmine) became pope in 912, and Edward succeeded to the crown of England, A. 901; so that the Confirmation of Privileges to which the Bull alludes, must, in the judgment of Parker, have been that ascribed to Edward the Elder, bearing date 915. But from what has already been said, it might easily be made appear, that every line in the Bull is at variance with Parker's supposition: it is, however, not necessary to produce proofs; for the Bull itself is in pp. 60, 61, Vol. I. of our Privileges, and in p. 13 of the same it may be seen, that this very Bull was one of Pope John's the Twenty-second, and that the Letters Patent of the King, of which the title is in the same page, and which are alluded to in the Bull, were Edward the Second's, both being of the date 1318. So that it is not necessary to call in Drs. Caius,† and Fuller,‡ both of whom, however, give the Bull to the Pope last mentioned, and the Letters Patent to Edward the Second, with the difference of one year in their dates.§

So much for Mr. Parker's supposition, which proceeds on an error so gross, that readers might suppose it an error of the press, which yet it cannot be, and which shews, how slightly some people examined the subjects, which we are now discussing.

* History and Antiquities of Cambridge, p. 22.

† De Antiq. Cant. l. 1, pp. 80, 81.

‡ Hist. Univ. Camb. p. 29.

§ Caius gives the date 1316, Fuller 1317. As to the difference about the Pope, Caius making him John the Twenty-second, Fuller the Twenty-first, they both mean the same. "Joannes XXI. dict. XXII.—1316." Bellarmine.

With the exception, then, of Parker's supposition, there is no room to doubt the authenticity of this Bull: and I shall go further, and introduce the following flourishing testimony of Dr. Fuller.

“ Now let none conceive Cambridge, long since the “ mother of many children, now but new-born, herself an “ University, from the date of this papal instrument: a mis“ take of many, alleging for the defence of their error, that “ otherwise it were ridiculous for our King to request, and “ the Pope to confer on Cambridge, what she had already;
 “ adding, moreover, that the phrase de Cætero, for the time
 “ to come, implieth, that de Præterito, for the time past, “ Cambridge was no University. But let such know, that “ in this Bull, Cambridge is confessed a place for students, “ time out of mind, or (to use the Pope's Latin) ab olim, “ where olim (a word of indefinite extent) is not made the “ measure of the antiquity of Cambridge, but (which is more)
 “ which is only the terminus a quo, whence her duration in “ her learned capacity is dated. This Bull also relateth to “ ancient privileges of popes and princes, bestowed upon “ her, which are herein corroborated and confirmed.”

Dr. Fuller adds, “ Know also—that Studium and Uni- “ versitas (which words occur in the Bull) are synony- “ mous, though the latter the more fashionable in this “ age.”

Now, admitting that the word Studium may be sometimes the same as Studium generale, and synonymous with University; as for instance, Studium Parisiense, for the University of Paris, in an Instrument of this John's, quoted by Twyne, and Studium Bononiæ, quoted by Dufresne, for the University of Bononia; still this is not necessarily its meaning, and it may be interpreted any place for study in general. And the Order preserved in the present Bull seems to require that distinction here. It had been a Studium for learned men; the Pope confirms this Studium, and further authorizes it in future to be a Generale Studium.

This interpretation, if admitted, will, without the arguments just advanced, invalidate the authenticity of the former Bulls. It would shew, that whatever privileges other popes or kings granted to this learned body, to which Pope John alludes in this Bull—yet that still it wanted that peculiar grant of pontifical authority, which would bind it more immediately to his interest, by that magical talisman of a word, University: and, consequently, that the former Bulls, in which that word occurs are fabrications, and no genuine instruments.

Now, these peculiar institutions, Universities, that is, to borrow Mr. Hobbes's definition of them, "Schools for the Sciences in general, and especially for Divinity," were first introduced about the time of Charlemagne, in the tenth century, and Mr. Hobbes, who was no more attached to institutions thus formed, than his great friend, Lord Bacon, asks, "What other designs was he (the pope) like to have, but the advancement of his own authority in the countries where the Universities were erected? There they learned to dispute for him, and with unintelligible distinctions to blind men's eyes, whilst they encroached on the Rights of Kings :"* a desperate bold measure, in the eyes of one who thought that the Rights of Kings absorbed every other right.

But, these considerations notwithstanding, the lawful constitutional rights of our kings continued; and with respect to our Academies, call them by what name we please, for their fundamental grants and present constitutions they rest on the royal authority. The imperium in imperio of a foreign power, is among the prodigiosa naturæ, formed in nature's sport, or in her spite, or in her scorn. This, however, was dissolved by the order of Edward III. as above; as, indeed, that order, as we shewed, proceeded on principles properly English, and essentially constitutional, not to be superseded, though suspended, by the assumption of popes, or the concessions of kings. Henry VIII.'s power, though it grew a monster form by the side of the people, yet by the side of the pope it was a creature well-proportioned and fair.

Non illi imperium pelagi, sævumque tridentem,
Sed mihi sorte datum; tenet ille immania saxa,
Vestras, Eune, domus: illa se jactet in aula

VIRG. ÆNEID. L. I. 141.

But of these matters already.

Drawing now to a close, with respect to remarks on Charters and Bulls, I beg leave to subjoin two or three more words on the latter. It is, we admit, then, one of John's (who gave the University one or two more Bulls,) and it is its own letter of recommendation: it is written with pontifical gravity, and in the exercise of a customary claim—the claim for establishing Universities: it exhibits the accustomed formalities of office in its dates, and has no anachronism of style. Universitas is properly used for a literary corporation, (as used in the diplomas of Henry III. ;) Collegium Magistrorum et Scholarium is of the same period; and qualibet facultate, by which is evidently meant, the faculties of arts, law, physic, and divinity, is both in time and place. For this word was used in that sense, nearly about the same period, in the Universities of Paris, of Oxford, and Cambridge. And I make such cursory observations, not without design: for admitting these as marks of authenticity in John XXII.'s Bull, we, at the same time have fresh arguments in proof of the surreptitiousness of the others.

And here an answer may be given to this question, why Clement V. who, in one of his Constitutions, made at Vienne, in France, (which may be seen in Wood's Ath. Oxon. V. I. p. 156,) mentions Oxford, Paris, Bononia, and Salamanca, does not notice Cambridge? I conceive the proper answer to be, (and more to the point than that given by Wood, though what he says has its proper weight,) that Clement had no evidence before him of Cambridge being, in the pontifical sense of the word, a Universitas: for Clement V. was made pope about the year 1305, and this Constitution was given in 1311: whereas John XXII. who gave the Bull, where Cambridge is confirmed an University, was not pope, as before observed, till 1316. John XXII. too it was, who collected the above Constitutions, and hence we may see why he worded his Bull to Cambridge as he did.

To these closing remarks on Bulls, I subjoin one on the Charters already examined.

There is a Charter then of Edward VI. entitled, Charta amplissima de Confirmatione omnium Privilegiorum Univ. Cant. ab Antecessoribus concessorum; beginning, Edw. Sentus Dei Gratia Ang. Fran.—Inspeximus, &c.—it recounts the Charters upwards, of Edw. IV. Rich. II. Edw. III. Edw. II. Edw. I. Hen. III.; there it stops:—it goes on—Nos autem Cartas et Literas prædictas ac omnia et singula in eisdem contenta rata habentes pro nobis et hæredibus nostris quantum in nobis est, acceptamus et approbamus, ac delectis nobis nunc. Cancellario Magistris et Scholaribus Universitatis prædictæ et Successoribus suis rati-

MELYSENT.

Now as this Carta Amplissima goes over all the Charters from Edward IV. up to Henry III., giving the faithful testimony of an Inspeximus, as to their existence, it follows, that none, prior to that time, did exist; otherwise they would certainly have been produced. Henry III.'s are equally silent.

Having now examined all such of the above papers as appeared surreptitious or doubtful, I incline to pass over such as are authentic, without any reflections, to serve the purposes that may suit the different tastes or inclinations of our readers. Enough, and (in the judgment of some, probably) more than enough, has been said already; yet, not so much as I intended to say. But on some subjects it is better to say too little than too much. And here, on recollection, it appeared, that I was imposing on myself a task that would prove not only tedious, and almost endless, but which would be unnecessary, and, indeed, inexpedient: tedious, on account of the multiplicity and the variety of materials; unnecessary, on account of the use already made of some things, in the History of Cambridge; and inexpedient, on account of the free remarks that I have made on certain subjects, less pleasing to me, elsewhere: particularly inexpedient on the present occasion, as, indeed, in my History, where I felt no desire, and I found it would not be my prudence, to intermingle subjects that might appear heterogeneous, and would divert the attention of my readers too far from our main design; while, at the same time, I was willing to keep true to such particulars as throw light on the History and Antiquities of Cambridge, or which remove obstructions to them.

And so here end our remarks on certain Bulls and Charters, contained in this Volume:—and we proceed next, to give a short account of the persons, to whom we are indebted for the Collection.

Of Robert Hare, Esq. a short account has already been given in our first volume of the History of Cambridge, though, from the paucity of materials we could find (there being little more than a bare mention of his name), it was necessarily very brief; but to what is said (Vol. I. pp. 9, 10, of the Introduction to our History), we may add, that he was a Roman Catholic, of family and fortune, in Norfolk; of Caius College, certainly, as others of his family were; though, being admitted before books of entrance and matriculation were regularly kept, it does not appear of what year.—He must be mentioned entirely in reference to his Collections; for of his literary character (though doubtless very respectable) we can form but a slight judgment from transcripts, which all his Collections are.

Those for Camb. University and town, are in four volumes, quarto, with the abbreviations, and letters of the Court hand, and some of the Chancery letters, a hand pretty much in use about the middle of the sixteenth century. He began them at the suggestion of Dr. Capcott, when Vice-Chancellor,* (which was in 1586), and they bear date 1587. So that he was quick in his work. Two copies were taken in 1589; one now possessed by the Vice-Chancellor for the time being, the other by the Public Registrar.—He afterwards proceeded to make Collections of the Privileges of the University of Oxford, beginning with Henry III. The dedication is dated 1592. There are in like manner two copies of these at Oxford, one in the Bodleian, the other in the Tower, where the University archives are kept. The last article in the Oxford book, is dated 8vo. die Febr: Anno decimo octavo Reginæ Elizabethæ. In his Dedication to the University, he announces his intention to present them at some future time with a separate book on other matters; which he accordingly did.

After examinations made of each of the above original volumes, at Cambridge and Oxford, it would be easy to swell this article: but it is unnecessary. All that could be said, must relate to the same subject; and the reader has before him what is most essential concerning Cambridge.

Hare had no remuneration for this work, except the most respectful thanks of the Universities: it appears by the Cambridge letter to him, in full Senate, that it was collected* at his own expence, and written with his own hand. Still, I suspect, he had a powerful motive. A Protestant princess was now on the throne; but the Catholics of that period believed, that the State and Universities of England would be brought back to Popery. I have read a curious manuscript volume written by a Catholic of abilities, where this belief is strongly expressed: "it contaynes certaine notes and advertisements which seeme might be proposed in the first Parliament and nationall Councell of our Countrie, after God of his Mercie shall restore it to the Catholick Faith." It goes through each department in Church and State, and treats much at large of Universities. It was written by R. P., and dated 1596, that is, only four years after the date of Mr. Hare's Oxford Privileges.

Now, from Hare's Address prefixed to the Camb. Privileges, he was evidently a zealous Catholic: though written in Elizabeth's reign, it begins in this decided strain:—Ad Honorem et Gloriam Omnipotentis Domini nostri Jesu Christi Salvatoris Mundi, ejusdemq. gloriosæ et beatissimæ Genetriciſ Mariæ Virginis, Sanctorumq. omnium cœleſtium, &c. To his Alma Mater, then, in her preſent lapsed ſtate, his attachment could not be ſtrong: ſtill he might work under the influence of principle, believing, that this offering, preſented to her, of Privileges, which were her inheritance from the firſt, would be a memorial and exemplar to her under the “Newe Reformation.”—But ſo much for our reſpectable Collector.

There is a ſimilar dearth of materials for any biographical ſketch of Dr. Francis Sawyer Parris, who tranſcribed the more eſſential parts of Hare’s Cambridge Priv. making to it the neceſſary additions, as we have them in the preſent volume: ſi igitur, qualis fuerit, quaeras, circumſpice.

But in addition, we add, (as ſeen in Vol. I. p. 31, Hist. Cam.) he was Maſter of Sidney College, Cambridge, a native of Bythorn, Huntingdonſhire. He was admitted Pensionarius Minor, Feb. 4, 1720, S.T.B. 1735, S.T.P. 1747; and admitted Maſter, in 1746.

Dr. Parris was a gentleman of reſpectability; and his memory is certainly to be reſpected by the College, for many valuable books preſented to the library, and the pecuniary ſervices he rendered it, when engaged in building the new chapel. He was, as we may conclude from this collection, eminently diſtinguiſhed for his acquaintance with all matters relating to the University, and ſeems to have found his great pleaſure to conſiſt in copying her records, which ſervice he performed ſeveral times over; for there are two volumes of them, ſimilar to my copy, poſſeſſed by Dr. Chafy, Maſter of the College; one volume of the ſame kind is poſſeſſed by the reſpected Mr. Tyrwhitt, of Jeſus College; and by the ſame chance that I have my copy, there may be thoſe who have others.

They are all copied in a neat clerical hand, without any of Mr. Hare’s abbreviations. I am not aware that he published any thing; but we muſt conclude, from his minute attention, and more than ordinary aſſiduity over ſuch-like matters as we now present to our readers, that as Dr. P. was a good scholar in general, so was he more particularly a gentleman of great official punctuality, regularity, and fidelity, both as Master of the College, and as Vice-Chancellor, and public Librarian (which he also was) to the University.

Dr. P. died May 1, 1760, and there is a respectful tribute to his memory on a tablet in the vestibule of Sidney College Chapel.

I now proceed, in order, to say a word or two on the uses to which the present collection may be made subservient: and here I shall be the more brief, because readers can best judge of such matters for themselves; and because, indeed, I have already dropped a few hints on the subject: for, to speak truly, before I prevailed on myself to attempt the Latin Dissertation prefixed to this volume, I had proposed to make the present Dissertation serve that purpose.

So speaking very generally, and with due submission to better judgments, I may be permitted, perhaps, to say, that it may be of value, (as I have before hinted,) in authenticating matters of Cambridge-History; and, in this point of view, it may be a very useful directory and guide, more authentic, certainly, and enlarged, than any we possess. It cannot fail, too, I think, of being useful to University-gentlemen in their several official capacities; nor less so to students, in making them well acquainted with the rites, customs, and duties, appertaining to their several situations. In gentlemen, formerly resident at Cambridge (though now at a distance,) it may awaken remembrances, not unpleasant, of former times, and of controversies, though not to be forgotten, yet now at rest; and if possessed of a fondness for antiquities, it may often assist their inquiries. To some it may be the means of answering doubtful questions on the spot, and, perhaps, of preventing hazardous or tedious altercations, and expensive processes: to others, who have no immediate interest in our Universities, nor any relation to them, (for such institutions must, from their very nature, excite a portion of public interest,) it may afford amusement, though it were such only as may be excited by curiosity. Nor am I prepared to say, that such a work may not have both a religious and political use. For should the time ever come, (and what has happened may happen again,) that these institutions should be thought susceptible of improvement, it may be useful to have before the eyes a model of the whole building; and I am not aware (I may speak without the suspicion of vanity where I have no share in the execution) that reformers and legislators will be able to find a more perfect one than that now before them. But let others judge of this. For myself, as Erasmus used<sup>d</sup> to say, he had not the spirit of a martyr, neither have I, to speak in a humbler tone, that of a reformer; and I have performed all that some sense of duty seemed to impose on me, in printing these materials, whether for information, or for direction—for amusement, or for thought. And at all events, to those who possess my History of Camb., the chronological tables will afford the means of ascertaining dates, which form the joints and strength of history.

As to my little zeal about reformation, this has been expressed, not from a belief that some principles are not more favourable to virtue and human happiness than others, or that I am indifferent to them, but through ignorance of the means, and from a deficiency of power. Under such circumstances, feeble, fruitless wishes may be the very hectic of folly; making brick without straw, or fishing in troubled waters without either hook or bait. The wish, however, of many good men I may be permitted to repeat: May nothing ever rest on our Universities, that is unfavourable to liberty, which is synonymous with virtue and true happiness!

It is not necessary for an editor to avow his approbation or disapprobation of all the particulars which he ventures to publish: it may suffice that they are a fair representation of facts, and that they elucidate a history which he wishes to authenticate.

It may suffice to have said thus much concerning the utility of these papers. An apology for the publication of them may form no improper conclusion. For though the design of printing them is approved by many gentlemen of the first abilities, learning, and worth, I am not ignorant, that it does not meet with the hearty approbation of others. It has, indeed, been suggested, that the publishing of them is not likely to prove useful and profitable to the editor, from the probability of their being unacceptable to many persons, whom they immediately concern.

Editorship may, it is confessed, in some cases, be its own punishment; and, in the present instance, had I duly calculated the difficulties and mortifications that I was going to expose myself to, I should certainly not have ventured to encounter them. With respect to others, it does not appear to me, why the printing of such papers should be unacceptable, or unfavourable to any one.

The publication was entered upon without any system, and even without any design. All at first intended, was to print a few additions and emendations to the History of the University and Colleges of Cambridge, which it was proposed to present gratuitously to the purchasers of that work: and could this have been effected in a moderate time, within reasonable limits, and at no great expence, nothing further, probably, would have been attempted, or even thought of. But, the sale of the book was too far advanced. For the purposes of booksellers I was too slow in my movements, and too liberal in my labours. So, having plenty of materials, to work I went, determining, at my own hazard, to form them into a regular, extended Supplement to the History, accompanied with the Emendations.

The publication of the Privileges was an afterthought altogether, that sprang up in my mind in an idle moment, while reposing from other lucubrations. But the thought would take its course; till, at length, it wrought a thorough belief, that nothing which I could write, or that was written by others, about Cambridge, could throw such unclouded light, such full demonstrative testimony, to its history, as the above documents, if duly examined by studious readers. So it was resolved to amalgamate the whole:—thus originated this Farrago Libelli.

And with regard to others, readers will take notice, that there are no Charters or Statutes of particular Colleges: they are of a private concern; many of necessity obsolete, and members, even by some of their statutes, allowed, within certain limits, to let them pass sub silentio; and where no such liberty is expressed, from the flux of time, the changeableness of language and opinion, it must be implied; for the spirit and intention of a founder or benefactor may be preserved, even when his words are obliterated and forgotten; while, in such matters, only Bigotry or Selfishness would intermeddle, who, like freebooters, would confine and fleece the sheep, to obtain the wool. But the liberality of the present times will envy no such liberties; and, on the present occasion, all due deference has been paid to the public opinion:—nor will any thing be found here relating to the properties of Colleges: on such matters, though often with the means of knowledge, the Editor possessed no curiosity:—circumstances these, which, it is hoped, may weaken some objections. But Charters of a University are of a different nature, belonging to the University at large, and, indeed, to the community.

——— *Mortalia facta peribunt,

And even these possess many things which are now obsolete and unintelligible; some absurd and ridiculous; others occasional and temporary; with some, which, if illiberal, are happily impracticable. Such things must yield to a limited interpretation, and unavoidable omissions be settled by a Vice-chancellor's dispensing power of absolution.* Should this publication indirectly prove, in any measure, the means of checking any grosser practices of immorality or impiety, so much the better; but it cannot revive what is obsolete, perpetuate what was temporary, nor add consequence to what is absurd.

With respect to James I.'s imposition of subscriptions on gentlemen on taking degrees, as noticed p. 347 of this volume, this, it is hoped, will, in time, be abolished; for even by Grace 1613, only Bachelors in Divinity and Doctors in aliquâ Facultate, are required to subscribe, vid. p. 234.

Should a period arrive for revising the state of these our learned bodies, then would be the time for recollecting, that every change has not been improvement; that what may accord with the spirit of the times, may be at variance with the object of the institutions; that bigots and mere politicians, that is, men half informed, and hypocrites, aim only to serve themselves, and their party; that virtue which seeketh not its own, with wisdom that can discern, and religion which can respect, the public good, have not always been the presiding geniuses that directed grave-seeming consultations.

Then, too, would be the time for examining into the truth of Mr. Locke's declaration:—"Absolute liberty, just
 " and true liberty, equal and impartial liberty, is the thing
 " we stand in need of. Now, though this has indeed been " much talked of, I doubt it has not been much under" stood; I am sure, not at all practised, either by our go" vernment towards the people in general, or by any of the " dissenting parties towards one another."—Letters on Toleration.

What has been said of forged Bulls and Charters need startle no one, who recollects, that in the times alluded to, forging was quite common, and indeed had long before extended to coins, medals, seals, and entire histories; the design was not considered gross, nor the execution difficult, nor the discovery to be apprehended: and, though to modern ears it may sound so dreadful, as to be scarcely credible, that men devoted professedly to religion should fabricate things of this kind, yet certain it is, that the principal manufacturers of them were monks, who thought themselves justified in securing whatever they coveted, and by whatever means they pursued it; nor need it startle us, that some of their pious frauds should have come down to us, nor that learned men should have spent some time in exposing them *. For, as on the one side, the monks had reduced their practices to an art, so, on the other, have rules as regular been laid down by many writers for its detection.

Suffice it here to say of the spurious writings alluded to, at present, that they are now matters of mere curiosity, which do not affect a single custom, a single statute, or a single privilege. For though we have seen, that they are not in the Inspeximus of Edw. VI. which comprehends Charters up to Hen. III., nor in any Charter of Hen. III., (that is, in the most ancient) still the Privileges of the University rest secure, independent of them, under the protecting shade of the royal authority of Hen. VIII., Edw. VI., and Queen Eliz.

The Charters and Bulls themselves have been so repeatedly published, that they cannot be reckoned among our curiosities, nor need be shrunk from as our arcana; and this consideration renders any apology for the remarks here made on them the less requisite, and all apprehension from the perusal of them quite unnecessary.

* Most authors on the subject of coins and seals have written distinctly the rules for discovering the true from the false; see a list of the writers in Fabricius's Biblioth. Antiq. C. XVI. Heineccius, Mabillon in his De Re Diplomatica, and particularly Dr. Hickes, in his Dissert. Epistolaris, Anderson, in his Diplomata Scotiæ, and Ruddiman, in his Preface to that work, have amply considered the subject, in reference to Charters and Bulls. Dr. James has published (1688) a considerable volume, on the Forgeries of Scripture, Councils, and Fathers; and Fabricius, an entire volume of False Gospels, 1703. Bede, Ingulph, and the monkish writers in general, overflow with forgeries; nor are even our old British and Saxon laws exempt. Vid. Ll. Wallicæ Hoeli Boni, by Wotton, p. 197. Ll. Anglos. by B. ## DISSERTATION THE SECOND.

THE preceding Dissertation has lain by the Author a considerable time, after being printed. It has been since reconsidered, and it occurred, that two or three ideas but just opened in it, might be carried to a more proper length, a few things only alluded to, more clearly elucidated, and others, which had been left in purposed obscurity, be expressed in more ample language, and with a less dubious meaning. Thus, the Royal authority in our Colleges and Universities has been spoken of in contradistinction merely to the claims of the Roman Pontiff; whereas it is capable of being, and ought to be, considered in reference to that of the Chancellors, of the local visitors, of the metropolitical visitors, of the Vice-Chancellors, and of the whole academical bodies in full senate.

So again, where mention is made of ignorance of the means of reformation, deficiency of power, and little zeal (see the preceding Dissertation, p. 420), it was not intended to express a doubt as to the Constitutional means and right of reforming these places, should reformation be required;—these following of course, and becoming quite conspicuous, after considering the nature and extent of the Visitatorial power—nor a slight conviction as to some things which would admit of, and which do absolutely require, reformation; but rather, the difficulties, the obstructions, and perplexities, which, from a variety of causes, lie in the way. The language, therefore, was that of caution and candour, and something of modest deference, rather than of transient observation, slight conviction, or a lukewarm indifference.

Further, as our observations related to Cambridge, they might be expected to be illustrated by examples drawn from the History of that University: nor will it be necessary often to refer back again to them. But the remarks are, in part, applicable to Oxford; and what follow will be derived principally from the History of that place; partly, for the sake of variety, and partly, of a remarkable case, which will be introduced, and with which they will be in some measure connected.

We shall find, then, in the History of Oxford, the King acting—in opposition to the Pope; as in the Brief* of Edward I., confirmed by a Parliament assembled at York, against the Preaching Friars, and in defiance of Popish Bulls; and in the Order† of Edward III. confirmed likewise by Parliament, commanding the Friars to renounce and suspend the execution of the Pope's Bulls:—in opposition to the Vice-Chancellor (who was the Ordinary), with his Proctors, as when by 49 Edward III. the King abrogated Statutes, made by the Chancellor, Proctors, and Heads of the University, who were cited before him, and removed for contumacy, though they pleaded the Pope's Bulls, A. 1411;—in opposition to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was alterius orbis Papa, the Legatus Renatus; as when Hen. III. on going to Gascoigne, appointed Gualter Gray, Archbishop of York, Will. de Cantalupe, and William de Eboroco, guardians of the University, to receive complaints during his absence, though the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Lincoln had the government of it, according to the Canons: and, in short, from the whole tenour of Oxford privileges, those granted by Hen. III. 1255, and by his successors, Edw. I. 1275, Edw. II. 1315, Edw. III. 1327, (when, after an Inspeximus, he confirmed those privileges) down to Hen. VIII. we may adduce the same conclusion.

Agreeably, too, to this character, Edw. III. abrogated some of their Statutes, and it was the intention of Hen. V. according to Ross‡, had he lived, to have introduced some literary improvements at Oxford :—from these several circumstances, we learn what ideas prevailed in those early times of the royal power, as supreme in this University ; and the extent of that supremacy, as exercised in both Universities in a later period, we are taught by what passed at the Reformation.

It should, however, be observed, that by the word King, in the preceding examples, I do not mean the man natural, nor the man merely regal, or tyrannical, but the man political, according to old Chancellor Fortescue's wise and correct distinction ; Principatu namq. nedum Regali, sed politico, ipse suo populo dominatur : Si regali tantum ipse præesset eis, Leges regni sui mutare ille posset :—yet, at the same time, Non minoris esse potestatis Regem politice imperantem, quam qui ut vult, regaliter regit populum suum *. In short, by the King, the Rex NON REGALITER regnans, sed politice, I must be understood to mean a King, who rules by the laws, and is incorporated into them, by which rum doctrinam abunde docerentur. Hanc Ordinationem dum puer eram, in Scriptis Oxoniæ vidi, sed quia tum eram minoris Ætatis, quæ vidi non diu memoriter tenui. Hist. Reg. Angliæ, p. 208, as edited by Hearne in Vol. X. of Leland's Itinerary. It has been said, by a certain writer, that Ross observes, Henry (9 Hen. V. as referred to by him) intended to alter the Statutes: but Ross does not directly assert this, and I suspect he was mistaken in what he does assert: had there been any such record of the date mentioned, and as having been seen by him when a boy, it is not likely it would have escaped the researches of the Oxford historians. Anthony Wood, however, asserts, Hist. Antiq. Univ. Oxon. Lib. I, p. 209, hastily, I think, if on the authority of Ross, that Hen. V. intended to have amended the Statutes. As to Ross, he speaks memoriter from what he saw when a boy, without it may be fairly presumed reading, or reading probably the title hastily: there is a large charter, confirmans Antiqua Privilegia, of the date of 1 Hen. V. that may be seen in the Appendix, Vol. II. of Ayliffe's History of Oxford; but I know of none of the former date, 9 Hen. V. It is a long recapitulation and confirmation of privileges, and alludes to some design, “super poenis pro securiori conservatione ipsius Universitatis,” &c. which is what, I suppose, Mr. Wood alludes to.

* De Laudibus Ll. Angliæ, cap. 9, 11.

incorporation, his Acts (meaning always his legal acts) become the Acts of the Parliament, or of the Supreme Government; that is, an English King.

Thus, the above Acts of the King, being either confirmed and passed by Parliament, or issuing from a branch of the kingly power acknowledged by it, are to be considered not as acts simply regal, but political and parliamentary—the King's Brief (12 Edw. II.), confirming all the former Oxford Charters, running thus—Rex, &c. coram nobis in concilio nostro in præsentī Parlamento nostro apud Ebor. convocato, &c.—and I studiously and purposely mark these distinctions, because certain Oxford writers, in order to invest our Kings with a power simply regal or tyrannical, have not. Thus one of them frankly, but foolishly, enough; “And here you may please to consider, that the Foundation of the University being the King's and his predecessors' personal act, his interest lies not within the reach of that beaten evasion of a public or politic capacity*.”

The remarkable case at Oxford, alluded to at the beginning of this Dissertation, was the interference of the royal authority in matters of academical œconomy, by the appointment of a President of Magdalen College. It occurred long after the Reformation, when the extent of the royal power in our Universities was more fully exemplified than will be now justified, viz. in James II.'s reign, 1687. It will be observed, however, that the proceedings relate to a private College; but they were of such public notoriety,

* The Privileges of the University in point of Visitation. 1647. It is without a name, but was written by Dr. Gerard Langbaine, and is understood to have expressed the sentiments of the University at that time, when the Parliament was about making a Visitation of it.

The doctrine, which makes no distinction in natural, regal, and political authority, was more amply laid down in a later period by Sir Robert Filmer, in his Patriarcha: and Mr. Locke, in his confutation of it, has maintained, and fully established, the distinctions laid down by Fortescue. See Locke's Two Treatises on Government; particularly, Treat. 1, ch. ix. and Treat. 2, ch. xv.

they occasioned so much discussion, and, particularly, they led to so thorough an examination of the principles on which the Visitatorial authority of the King over our Universities in general is founded, that I have selected the case in preference to any other example. The period when it occurred was, it must be confessed, a most critical one, viz. between the Reformation, when, with a short interval, prerogative was stretched to it's utmost pitch, and the Revolution, when it was confined within more reasonable, constitutional limits. The case, then, was as follows.

On the death of Dr. Clarke, President of Magdalen College, the King granted a mandate, recommending Anthony Farmer, A. M. into his place, any statute, custom, or constitution, to the contrary, in any wise notwithstanding, where-with the King was pleased to DISPENSE in his behalf. The President and all the Fellows petitioned against this dispensation, Mr. Farmer being, in their judgment, unqualified, according to the Founder's Statutes, for the office. The petition was endorsed April 10, 1687. About the same time, the Bishop of Winchester, the local visitor, wrote a Letter to the Lord President, stating to him, that the appointment of Mr. Farmer would be contrary to the Statutes of the College, and to the oaths taken by the Fellows; and (the Vice-President and Fellows having elected Dr. Hough, afterwards Bishop of Worcester) the Visitor admitted him to the presidency. The College at the same time presented an address to the Duke of Ormond, stating to him the words of their oath, and that, in compliance with it, they could not choose Mr. F., an unqualified person; that being forced by their Statutes to proceed to the election within a limited time, they had chosen a loyal person, Dr. Hough, whom they accounted statutably qualified for the place; entreating, at the same time, his Grace to interfere with his Majesty on their behalf. In the case of the Vice-President and Fellows, as stated by them, among other particulars, they represented, that there was an express clause in their oath, taken by every Fellow on his admission, wherein he swears, neither to procure, accept, nor make use of, any dispensation from his oath.

The King was most strenuous in this business, and appeared personally at Oxford; but the Vice-President and Fellows, abiding by the dictates of their consciences, would not elect Farmer.

The King, on hearing what had passed, ordered the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Causes to proceed against them; when the Vice-President, with certain of the Fellows deputed, gave in their reasons, which have already been stated, why they could not choose Mr. Farmer for their President; to which statement they subjoined the statutes for regulating the election of a president, together with the oath taken by them when made Fellows. The Commissioners, however, declared the election of Dr. Hough set aside, and after removing him from the Presidency, summoned the Fellows to appear before them in the Council-Chamber at Whitehall, to answer for contempt.

It appears that Farmer, besides his other disqualifications, was an immoral man. So the King, still asserting his prerogative, together with his claim of dispensation, granted another mandamus, to admit the Bishop of Oxford to the office: but, in answer to the Lord President's Letter, it was replied, that the place was filled; that Dr. Hough had been elected: but, in another Letter to his Lordship, the Fellows said, that if the King thought proper by his own proper authority to constitute the Bishop of Oxford President, they would readily acknowledge and obey him; but begged to be excused choosing him, which they could not do without violating their oaths.

As the King and his party were most strenuous on their side, the Vice-President and Fellows were no less decided on theirs; and, eventually, did not only not choose the Bishop of Oxford, but thought themselves justified in not admitting him, when nominated in the King's mandate.

To cut the matter short, Royal Commissioners were at length appointed, who met at Magdalen College-Hall—the Bishop of Oxford was confirmed and settled in the Presidency, and the Vice-President, with all the Fellows, one or two excepted, who were more complying, were ejected, for disobeying the King's mandate, and, further, for what was called contempt.

The conduct of James kindled, as might have been expected, a violent flame through the nation at large, as well as in the University; and various publications were issued on the subject*. On the one hand, those who were alarmed at the King's Popish principles, and abhorred his political measures, (such as afterwards hailed the Revolution, as the great national deliverance) examining the proceedings by the principles of the common law, by the Statutes of the College, and the nature and obligation of an oath, considered the Fellows as the advocates of liberty, and martyrs to their principles. On the other, those who defended the King's cause, considered them as rebellious, pleading the King's right to set aside statutes, to dispense with oaths, by arguments taken principally from the civil and ecclesiastical law.

As the above case is particular, referring to a private college, it does not, agreeably to what was intimated above†,

* There was published "An Impartial Account of the illegal Proceedings against St. Mary Magdalen College, Oxford, in the Year of our Lord 1687;" and in 1689 it was enlarged, and republished, as collected by a Fellow of the Society, after the return of the Fellows at the Revolution. A much larger work, called also an Impartial Relation of the late Visitation, was published in 1688, by Dr. Nathaniel Johnston, at the command of his Majesty. The principal difference in the accounts of these two parties concerns the Examination relating to Mr. Farmer's immoralities, which is given at large in the Fellow's Account, but suppressed in Dr. Johnston's. There was also published in 1686 a Vindication of his Majesty's Ministers, in respect to these proceedings. This Vindication also appears to have been published by authority.

fall properly within the limits of our inquiry. It has, however, been stated here, because the perusal of it may lead to a more general topic, the nature and extent of the King's authority, as the supreme visitor of our Universities, for the purpose of redressing grievances and reforming abuses. For though, as we shall see, and indeed has been seen already, our University Courts proceed on the principles of the Civil Law, according to which quod Regi placuit, Legis habet vigorem, yet they are not properly ecclesiastical courts: the power of dispensing with oaths, of setting aside laws, and of creating at pleasure new commissions, on which our Tudors and our Stuarts so confidently acted, was derived from the practice of the Papacy, countenanced indeed by the spirit of the Civil Law, but is not agreeable to those of our Common Law, and of the ancient, and happily for us, the present constitutional character of a King of England*. Cases there are, where promises cannot be fulfilled, do what we may, and where even oaths must give way; but at what time, and under what circumstances, is one of the nicest points in morals and religion; certainly not at random, from any motives of interest, or convenience, or fear, or at the will and command of a monarch. Here conscience only can guide. With respect to the Fellows of Magdalen, it must be observed, that theirs was not the situation of persons violating statutes, where there might lie an appeal from the local Visitor to the King, as supreme Visitor, but of men abiding by their statutes, and justified by the proper interpreter of them, their local Visitor: nor again, was the King in the situation of one (with his Parliament) coolly altering statutes, and new-modelling an academical body, according to any supposed system of reformation, or in accommodation to any new plan of government, settled by the Legislature; but in that of one acting in the spirit of an autocrat, proclaiming regaliter, sic volo, sic statuo: stet pro ratione voluntas; for it does not appear, that in issuing his extraordinary mandate, the King assigned any reason—the ecclesiastical and other commissioners, though not without forms, proceeding in the most summary way—nor did the Bishop of Chester*, one of them, once intimate, that the Fellows in the particular instance of non-compliance with his Majesty's pleasure, had broken a single statute;—but, rather, “that they had opposed his Majesty's will and pleasure, who had required them to admit the Bishop of Oxford into the place of President, any statutes, custom, or Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, with which he was graciously pleased to dispense, and to which he expected their ready obedience.” So that most readily do I agree with one of the learned Counsel, in the case of a late memorable appeal†, who, in alluding to this example, justly observes, “that no act of the despotic monarchs of the House of Stuart was more odious, or more hostile to the spirit of English laws and English freedom, than that of the interference of James II. in the transactions relating to Magdalen College, Oxford:” and among the friends to the Revolution, there can exist now little diversity of opinion on the subject; it being “declared in the Bill of Rights by the Lords spiritual and

† Report of the Proceedings on the Case of an Appeal preferred by the Provost and Scholars of King's College, Cambridge, against the Provost and Fellows of Eton. By Philip Williams, Esq. 1816.

The Appeal itself, as preferred A. D. 1814, and the Answer, have been published by another gentleman, with Remarks on Mr. Williams's Report of the Pleadings, the latter being, according to the writer, defective in some facts and arguments, which though, as a legal case, they might be considered irrelevant, are by him viewed as interesting to those more immediately concerned, viz. such as are any ways connected with those two Societies.

temporal, and Commons assembled in a full and free representation of this nation, that the pretended power of suspending of laws, or the execution of laws by regal authority, without consent of Parliament, is illegal; and, that no declarations, judgments, doings, or proceedings, to the prejudice of the people in any of the said premises, ought in any ways to be drawn hereafter into consequence or example, the power of dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, as exercised of late, being illegal."

It may be observed, that as there are instances where bad laws may be over-ruled, to the public benefit, so are there others, in which such as are good may be misapplied; and what, if rightly and legally administered, might remove disease, by a perverted use, may operate as poison, and produce instant death. And with these remarks, we proceed to consider the grounds and reasons of the King's or Queen's Supreme Visitatorial authority in our Universities.

It will be recollected, that as single Colleges are Corporations, so is the aggregate of Colleges one great Corporation; and in the same sense, in which the King is supreme in ecclesiastical matters, and the Fons Potestatis of all civil executive authority under Parliament, so is he supreme over all corporations. Colleges and Universities, like other corporate bodies, are supposed to originate in him*; for,

* Judge Blackstone, who has written so well on the subject of Corporations, divides them into Ecclesiastical and Lay; and he subdivides Lay into Civil and Eleemosynary. Universities and Colleges are equally alike, and distinctly, Corporations: but he ranks Universities under Civil Corporations—"The rewards," says he, "there being, pro opera et labore, not charitable donations only, since every stipend is preceded by service and duty." Colleges he ranks among Eleemosynary Corporations, "being," he adds, "founded for two purposes—1. for the promotion of piety and learning by proper regulations and ordinances—2. for imparting assistance to the members of those bodies." His distinction appears correct and true: but as well Colleges as Universities he considers, strictly speaking, Lay Corporations, "although they, in some things, partake of the nature, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical bodies." Comment. on the Laws of England, though founders and benefactors may endow them with lands and other property, though they may make statutes, or cause them to be made by their heirs and successors, or local Visitors, still, by whomsoever such property is bestowed, and such statutes are given, the grant is derived from him: the royal charter is what constitutes them Corporations: and all their rights of mortmain, and all their privileges, are derived from the sanction of the Prince acting with, and as, the supreme authority: and, as a Royal Charter of a University gives the Privileges of a Corporation, so does the receiving of Privileges imply an acknowledgment of a supreme Power;—and accordingly, in all matters of appeal, however they may have been doubted, or disputed, in their first stages, in our Universities, the final appeal was to that. This authority, too, is constantly perceived and felt in the ordinary language and regular œconomy of the place, particularly in the Royal Mandates for degrees—the most prominent part of academical discipline—it is from the beginning acknowledged in all ancient instruments, and on great occasions it may be called forth with a powerful energy, and to a great extent; abolishing old statutes, giving new regulations, superseding ancient customs, prescribing the order of literary pursuits, and, in short, new creating the whole face of things.

B. I. ch. 18. Of Corporations, in general, he observes, “ With us in England, the King’s consent is absolutely necessary to the erection of any Corporation, either implicitly or expressly given: his implied consent is found in those Corporations which exist by the force of the Common Law, to which our former Kings are supposed to have given their consent; Common Law being nothing more than custom arising from the universal agreement of the whole community;” and the remark which follows is to be considered as in immediate connexion with the above passage, and is to be expounded by it; for, after observing, “ that (till of late years) most of those statutes, which are usually cited as having created Corporations, do either confirm such as have been before created by the King; or, that they permit the King to erect a Corporation in futuro with such and such powers, he adds, so that the immediate creative act was usually performed by the King, in virtue of his royal prerogative.

This supreme authority over our Universities has, I apprehend, a threefold support; 1. in our Common Law; 2. in the Civil Law; 3. in the Ecclesiastical Law.

1. With respect to the Common Law. It has been elsewhere made appear, that the word University was used, in ancient times, for bodies corporate, before it was applied to institutions for the liberal sciences. It may be added, that in our common-law writers it was synonymous with Corporations;—thus Bracton*: “Si Rex concesserit alicui Universitati, sicut Civibus et Burgensibus.” Universities are, therefore, what Sir Edward Coke calls all corporate societies in general; “Creatures of the Crown,” by which he means what Fortescue intends by a Politico-Regal King, such as is owned by the common law of England; and Coke maintains of Corporations, they are made legal four ways—1st, by Common Law, as by the King himself; 2dly, by authority of Parliament: 3dly, by the King’s Charter; 4thly, by Prescription. Now these are all in reality by Common Law; for what is done by Act of Parliament becomes the law of the land, and must have had the royal sanction; and what stands on prescription, supposes a previous grant, though it may be lost.

Those who suppose that all the Royal Charters of Privileges, prior to the time of King Stephen, are genuine, must allow them to have been granted in the proper character of a King of England, under the shadow of the Common Law; for, till the time of that Prince the Civil Law was not admitted here: and, though I have defended the contrary opinion, viz. that most are spurious till the time of Hen. III. it does not follow† that I suppose no privileges * Lib. 11. fo. 5, 6. Coke, 10 Rep. 29.

† Though perhaps more than enough has already been said on the internal evidence of the inauthenticity of some of our early charters, yet on the external I beg leave to subjoin a few more particulars, in confirmation of what has been advanced.

It has been shewn to be highly probable, not to say certain, that the old-were given before that period: on the contrary, as our law courts would suppose, so I am willing to suppose, that est Charter extant of Cambridge-University is of the reign of Hen. III. that of Oxford is referred to sometimes, as being of the same reign, A. 1248. In Tur. Scholarum. See Ayliffe's Hist. of Oxford; though I have perused an instrument of an earlier date in the same place, viz. 3 Joannis, A. 1201. See Sup. to the University of Cambridge, p. 153.

Whatever privileges then these places enjoyed, and whatever were the means of conveying them, it is highly probable, that no such Charters, genuine, at least, as those which have been brought forward, should be in existence before the time just mentioned, and for these additional reasons.

Near this time (viz. under K. John) a reform took place in keeping such public instruments and Charters as passed the King's seal: till that time, they had not been kept separate and distinct, so as to remain on record according to the method afterwards observed; the reason and grounds for which may be seen in the Introduction (p. 10, 11, &c.) to Sir Josiah Ayloffe's Calendar of the Ancient Charters, in the Tower of London. This practice was uniformly followed afterwards, and in executing it a regard was had to authentic Charters of preceding reigns, that such records might be referred to in evidence of the people's rights, and be rendered accessible to the King's subjects. Among the Chartæ Antiquæ (the most ancient that we possess), there are extracts from Charters of our ancient kings, before the time of K. John. See Mr. Jones's Index to the Records, p. 20; and though the Charters of the town (given by K. John) are there, no Charter of the University before Hen. III. has been found in the Exchequer or the Tower.

Many other public instruments begin in the reigns of Hen. III. Edw. I. II. III. at which period I suppose that our first Cambridge-University Charters begin. Thus the Placita Coronæ, the Memoranda and Originalia of the King's Exchequer do not commence till 1 Hen. III. though the method of making Estreats from Charters, Patents, &c. was observed before; and the most ancient Inquisitiones post mortem, remaining in the Tower, are of the reign of Hen. III. The most ancient Statute Roll in the Tower begins with the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I. The most ancient Assay Roll of the Mint is referred to the reign of Edw. I. The Inquisitiones ad quod Damnum are of the date 1 Edw. II. See Ayloffe's Introduction to Chartæ Antiquæ, as before. So again, the first writ for summoning Parliament was 49 Hen. III. See Dugdale's "Perfect Copy of all Summonses of the Nobility to the Great Councils and Parliaments of the Realme, from the 49th of Hen. III." and Alsynge's "Manner of holding Parliaments in England." All these ideas are favourable to the opinion, that the Charters introduced into our Histories of Cambridge before the reign of Hen. III. are not genuine.

where a corporation exists, acknowledged in the confirmation of privileges and posterior Grants, of successive Kings,

I lay but little stress on what is advanced by some, (and even in favour of the authenticity of our old Charters) that the original Charters, for which they contend, were burnt by the townsmen in the riots of Edw. II.'s reign; for it should seem that the Charters then burnt were only those very Charters given by Edw. II. himself; for thus 5 Rich. II. reads—Chartas aliasq. litteras Patentes et Privilegia Sub Sigillo Regis, qui nunc est, consignata, ac dictæ Universitati concessa—Quas Cartas, &c. dicti Major, Baillivi, &c. in Foro dictæ Villæ violenter cremaverunt. The King accordingly, 7 Rich. II. gave them other Charters, and those very Charters, together with those up to Hen. III. are among the Rot. Cartarum in the Tower; none higher: so that I must be allowed to abide by the opinion, that we have no authentic Royal Charter, which concerns Cambridge, beyond the reign of Hen. III. It is a circumstance, highly honourable to this present reign (of Geo. III.) that, under the direction of the late Speaker of the House of Commons and his Secretary, Mr. Rickman, now one of the Clerks of the House, the public records of this country have been brought into excellent order, for they had been for some time in great confusion. See "The Reports from the Select Committee appointed to inquire into the State of the Public Records of the Kingdom, ordered to be printed by the House of Commons 4 July, 1800, and subsequent Years." The gentleman who was employed on the Records of the Tower is also joint editor of the Magna Britannia. I thought it, therefore, a proper time, and that Mr. Lysons was the proper person to ask, whether, after the new arrangement of the Records in the Tower, he had been able to find any Charter relating to Cambridge University higher than the reign of Hen. III.? He replied by asking, "Do you think if I could, I should not have given it in my Magna Britannia?"

I lay no great stress on the silence of some very early, but less general, Charters on the names of the Royal Grantors of Charters, who preceded them, as being sometimes written in general language, Regibus Angliæ, Antecessoribus Nostreis, &c. nor on the silence of any more general Charter—though indeed the former sometimes announce their names, and the latter, if not always, commonly, do—Thus, in more ancient times, those of Rich. II. refer to those of the Edwards and Henrys; that of the 1 Hen. V. (Oxford Chart.) runs over the Grants, and the names of the Royal Grantors, up to Hen. III. as we have shewn Edw. VI. does in his ample Charter to Cambridge. That of Hen. VI. A. Regni sui 37 (Cambridge Privileges) refers to Rich. II.'s Charter: so, in regard to the ample Charter (A. 1510, 2 Hen. VIII. Oxford, the King refers to that of Edw. IV. and others: and Edw. VI. to Charter, A. 1523, 14 Hen VIII. and the Charter of Incorporation of the Colleges and Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, 13 Eliz. chap. 29, refers, in like manner, to those of Hen. VIII. The same practice was fol-that there must have existed some prior Grant, by which it was at first constituted a body corporate, (which is what is lowed in some Oxford genuine Popish Bulls, as in Pope Sixtus IVth's (Wood's Antiq. Oxon. Lib. I. p. 230,) and, for obvious reasons, would be in the confirmation of the supposed Cambridge ones of Sergius and Honorius; and this seems to have been the rule with respect to other corporations, as with the Cinque Ports. Thus King John, in a Charter to Dover, refers to privileges formerly granted; and Edw. I. who also gave Dover a Charter, says, he had seen Charters given by his grandfather, Hen. by John and Will. I. and Edw. the Confessor. See the History of the Town of Dover, Vol. I. By the Rev. Mr. Lyon.

Now, that from the time of Queen Elizabeth up to Hen. III. the name of any royal Grantor, prior to the reign of the latter Prince, should not once have occurred, nor that Hen. III. himself, though he gave several Charters, should not once have mentioned the name of any one of those his Royal Predecessors, who gave the specific Charters, here supposed (without entering on their internal evidence), is surely a very strong presumption against their authenticity, far more strong than all the testimonies united that can be produced by Cambridge Antiquaries, to prove them genuine.

One concluding remark on these Charters, which, I beg leave to add, arises from the testimonies of Mr. Prynne and Mr. Madox's History of the Exchequer, as referred to in the Introduction to Sir Joseph Ayloffe's Calendar of the Char. Antiq. which is, that many of our records were destroyed during the wars between the King and Barons, in the reigns of K. John and Hen. III. and of the Houses of York and Lancaster, and many in those between the Empress Maud and King Stephen; so that, to say nothing of damp, mildew, dust, and negligence, those acknowledged destroyers of old writings, it may be presumed, a similar fate befell many other of our national muniments, which must have passed under the Great Seals of our princes, and been preserved in the Records of the Chancery. We may therefore consider the silence of Hen. III. in all his Charters, as external proof, that no Charters of the University of Cambridge had at that time any legal existence at least; and from the internal evidence on the Charters in question, according to the rules laid down for examination by the learned Dr. Hicke in his Dissertatio Epistolaris, it is most probable, that they had no existence at all.

On our Popish Bulls I shall make no further observations, except in the way of adding Mr. Prynne's name to the list of those who thought them spurious; and as an inquirer into ancient records, no man was more indefatigable than Mr. Prynne, as a public Visitor to the University of Oxford, appointed such by Parliament, no one more interested in being correct; and as an honest man, no one more prepared to speak according to evidence. Mr. Prynne furnishes us with no reasons for his opinion, but reasons un-meant by prescription) though the original cannot be produced, and though the Charters in being may not be the doubtedly he possessed, which fully satisfied his own mind. In his Treatise, entitled, "The University of Oxford's Plea refuted, or a full Answer to a late printed Paper, entitled, the Privileges of the University of Oxford in point of Visitation, having occasion to allude in his text to the Bulls of Sergius and Honorius, he puts in his margin some such words as these; (I have not now the book at hand), "These Bulls of Sergius and Honorius are Bulls indeed!"

This attempt, in connexion with what has been said elsewhere, to remove a little rubbish and verbiage from the early part of our Cambridge-History, will, it is hoped, be compensated by the light thrown on the periods immediately following; the reigns of Hen. III. of the three Edwards, and Rich. II. For it will be found, that our academical Records, during those periods, possess, in proportion to the nature of the subject, and for an historical detail of our Academical Republic, many advantages even superior to some of our National Records for the purpose of a public narrative; as will appear by stating a few particulars.

Neither The Articuli super chartas, the great Charter of King John, nor that of K. Henry, are now to be found on any known Rolls of those princes; this, however, is only mentioned as a remarkable circumstance, for though not on any extant Roll, they are in existence. But, of the National Records of the reigns of Hen. III. the three Edwards, and Rich. II. many are much mutilated, and some are absolutely lost. Thus, though according to Elsynge (Manner of holding Parliaments in England) and Dugdale, (Perfect Copy of Summonses, &c.) the Writs of Summons and Returns to Parliament began at the 49th year of Hen. III. yet the oldest Rolls of Parliament now in existence are those of three Parliaments in the reign of Edw. I. and the Rolls from that period to the reign of Edw. III. are also lost. Introduction to Ayloffe's Calender to Ancient Charters.

Elsynge (Ch. viii. p. 262) commences his Account of Receivers and Triers of Petitions, with the Parliament, 6 Edw. III. and the first Bundle of Petitions, with Judgments on them, now in the Tower of London, are, 1 Ric. II., though the practice of presenting petitions to Parliament is known to be of a much more ancient date. Hence it has happened, that some doubts have remained as to the ancient formalities on the subject of petitions.

Even the Placita Parliamentaria, preserved in the Tower, do not begin till Edw. III's reign; and of those of an earlier date, in the Chapter-House of Westminster, some are very defective.

Various other defects, mutilations, and losses, will be found in the Public Records, during the same period, which are pointed out by inquirers into our National Muniments; and, yet it was during that period that great genuine ones: and on this supposition, as in the former case, Royal Grants must have been grounded in the Common Law, for the reason already assigned.

In the 13th year of Elizabeth's reign passed that memorable Act, concerning the several Incorporations of Oxford and Cambridge*, and the confirmation of their Charters, Liberties, and Privileges. Many of their old Charters and Privileges, by acts subsequent to them, had been annulled; and this is the act on which the Privileges now entirely rest, being placed under the shadow and protection of the Common Law. For, though we know that some acts of Parliament, particularly in those arbitrary reigns, were but little according to the genius of the Common Law, being expressive merely of the will of the prince, yet all parliamentary acts, in becoming the law of the land, are presumed to be agreeable to the Common Law, and if they are not, there is a dereliction of the rule presumed†: besides, Henry and attention had been paid to them, and not continued from the death of Edw. III. till the full establishment of the Reformation.

On the other hand, our academical Records, during the same period, if Mr. Hare has been a faithful copyist, (and his faithfulness I have never heard questioned) are preserved in perspicuity, and possess authority; not interrupted by losses, perplexed with omissions, nor metamorphosed by additions and transmutations: they are brought out of their masses of general confusion; and are regular, clear, and well arranged. The matter of some may, at the time, have occasioned altercations; the meaning of others may since have admitted of disputes; and in the present times, the quality of others may be liable to objections: still the limits are fixed and known; the facts are in a tangible shape; and the chronologies are adapted to the purposes of genuine history.

† Mr. Hooker well understood, and in his famous 1st Book of Ecclesiastical Polity, particularly in Section the 10th, well-followed, the Elements and Principles of our Common Law, as would appear on comparing them with the "Abusion de la Common Ley, Ch. v. Sect. 1. of la Mirroir des Justices." He well knew, "that to command whole societies of men belongeth properly unto the same entire societies," and "that laws are not therefore, which public approbation hath not made so—either in their assent by voice, sign, or from others doing it in their names by a right origi-

Elizabeth, in claiming the supremacy in church and state, were thought to act only in conformity to the ancient rights of the Kings of England, and to the high rank which they held, as Guardians of all Corporations, whether ecclesiastical or lay, eleemosynary or civil, and with respect to Colleges and Universities, more especially, as the high supreme Visitors for adapting these foundations to their new establishments. And all this was accounted to be according to the genius of the Common Law of England.

The advocates, then, of the royal cause in * asserting the supremacy, did at the time, as they have since, strenuously reason, not only from the Old and New Testament, and the Practice of the Primitive Church †, but particularly from the consideration, that, from time immemorial, the kings of England had exercised authority in ecclesiastical affairs; that is, they argued from ancient usage, which is the same as Common Law ‡; and if our Universities are rightly viewed as Royal Corporations, the reasonings of those writers will apnally derived from them;” in short, that there is “no complete lawful power, but by consent of men.”

These Elements and Principles, however, do not so well hang together in his application of them in some other of his Books of Ecclesiastical Polity, though much better than those of Bishop Warburton on the same subject: but these excellent ideas fully possessed Hooker's mind, and, therefore, knowing, that what concerns a nation, should have a nation's consent, he says, Book the 8th, in reference to the National Church and the Supremacy, “That our laws made concerning religion, do take, originally, their essence from the power of the whole Realm, and Church of England.”

ply here. For the Crown, on these principles, had the power and the right, at first, to give them, as Corporations, Charters; and if so, on a proper occasion, to grant new ones, to cancel ancient Statutes, and to direct others to be made more congenial to modern manners, and any new order of things; though, in admitting this, we may not be able to approve and justify all that was done by our princes; all the works of man reminding us of his fallibility and imperfection, and rarely allowing of unmixed praise—nor is it called for or necessary here; for, while the work here alluded to was proceeding in the principles of the Common Law, another great machine was set in motion, which seemed to work the same way, and, though with more dispatch, to produce similar effects. This was the Civil Law. It worked the same way, and produced similar effects, though its principles and maxims are somewhat different, and sometimes opposed to each other.

2. The Civil Law differs from the Common, as in other respects, so especially, in two particulars; it knows neither a Jury*, nor a Parliament†; and, as a consequence, is too favourable to arbitrary power.

The Civil ‡ Law having made its way into England about

‡ The exact nature and denomination of the law in our Universities have been made the subject of some dispute, particularly in that warm controversy at Cambridge in 1750, 1751, and 1752, “concerning the right of appeal from the Vice-Chancellor to the Senate: one writer against the appeal, (Dr. Chapman, Master of Magdalen College) maintaining, in the course of his argument, that the University-Courts were directed purely by the Civil Law, to the entire exclusion of the Canon: (an Inquiry into the Right of Appeal from the Chancellor or Vice-Chancellor, &c. in Matters of Discipline, 1751) another (Mr. afterwards Bishop, Hurd), that the law was of a mixed quality, Ecclesiastico-Civil: See the Opinion of an eminent Lawyer, (Mr. Attorney-General Yorke, afterwards Lord Chancellor Hardwicke) concerning the time of King Stephen, became much of a study, and easily found a place in our University-Courts.

the Right of Appeal from the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge to the Senate. By a Fellow of a College. 1752. It was sufficient to characterize it in the text by the simple term, Civil, for the present, that being acknowledged, and acted upon in Q. Elizabeth's Statutes, though I incline to the opinion of the Eminent Lawyer, and for the following, as well as other, reasons.

If our Universities were not in those early times spiritual Corporations, they were at least usually reckoned in ordine ad Spiritualia; and though the members were not all spiritual men, the Chancellor (then called Rector) always was, and the officers known in his courts were brought over from the Ecclesiastical and Civil Courts. The Rescript of Bishop Montecute relates to spiritual crimes, as well as to such as were merely academical; and in the Bishop of Ely's Rescript respecting Cambridge, and of the Bishop of Lincoln's, respecting Oxford, express mention is made of spiritual jurisdiction. In the Composition, 1219, between the Chancellor and Archdeacon of Oxford, the Chancellor is allowed to have omnimodam Jurisdictionem, &c. even plenam Jurisdictionem Archidiaconalem, &c. and Pope Sixtus the IVth, as other popes had done before (particularly in the Processus Barnwellensis) A. 1479, in his Bull of Confirmation of Privileges expressly notices omnem Jurisdictionem etiam Scholasticam et spiritualem. To this notion also was favourable the provision made for the study of Canon as well as of Civil Law at Oxford by Edw. II. Ayliffe's Hist. of Oxford, Vol. II. App. 35.

The University-Courts then savoured of the ecclesiastical, both in their language and practice. They had probate of wills; the Vice-Chancellor could, for proper cause, suspend from degrees; and even excommunicate: and to this day, at the end of every term he gives absolution. Dr. Chapman, who, on the subject of appeals, wrote two pamphlets, has, in one, instanced a Chancellor, who excommunicated, though he had before denied ecclesiastical censures to be of his jurisdiction. The Processus Barnwellensis grants the power of excommunication in full form. By letters patent of Rich. II. it appears, under the Great Seal, that the Chancellor was authorized to give *Significavit*s to the Chancery of his Excommunications, as Bishops did; and the writ de Excommunicato was accordingly issued. Edw. I. excommunicated the Bailiffs of Cambridge for infringing the Privileges of the University.

It does not, however, follow, that our Universities are now ecclesiastical Corporations at all, though much of ancient language may still remain, when an ancient practice and constitution have undergone a change. It is the judgment of a great legal authority, (General View of Decisions, by Lord Mansfield, in Civil Causes: by W. D. Evans, Esq. Vol. I. p. 159) that whatever might be the notion of former times, "it is most certain now that Universities are lay Corporations," to which Judge Blackstone adds,

It has been shewn in our History of Cambridge, how that University, by various grants from the Crown, were freed from the courts of Common-Law*; and how, by a decree of Hugh de Belsham, Bishop of Ely, by a Rescript of Simon de Montacute, Bishop of Ely, and various other instruments and Popish Bulls, it was much delivered from ecclesiastical courts. These latter Bulls were all confirmed and finally settled by Pope Martin, in that famous instrument called Processus Barnwellensis, when the jurisdiction of the Chancellor was finally passed, A. D. 1420. Similar proceedings had taken place in the University of Oxford, in civil and ecclesiastical matters, the University having been relieved from certain powers of the Bishop of Lincoln, in whose diocese Oxford then lay. The Universities therefore had courts of their own, which were courts of record, the proceedings in which were regulated by the maxims of the Civil Law†. In ordinary crimes, relating to

“ though they are sometimes totally composed of ecclesiastical persons.” In like manner, though, in our Colleges, founded before the Reformation, there remain Statutes which were never abolished, in which masses are appointed for the souls of Founders, and other Popish language is introduced, yet these Colleges are all now Protestant. Hence, as the Canon and Civil Law had been in the same course of study, and the Legis Utriusq. Doctor formed one degree, so there seems formerly to have been some intermixture of them in our courts. It was Harry the Eighth, as we have seen, who abolished the study of the Canon Law in the Universities, but at the same time established Lectures for the Civil. And the power, by which a Vice-Chancellor, at the end of every term, still gives absolution, is now derived from the Crown, the Supreme Head of all Corporations.

* The University of Paris possessed similar Privileges: “ Philippe-Auguste consideroit beaucoup cette compagnie, puisqu’il accorderoit a tous les membres, qui la compsoient l’exemption de la justice seculiere dans les causes criminelles, et obligeoit le prevôt et tous les Bourgeois de Paris de jurer l’observation du nouveau Privilege. Crevier. Lord Mansfield “ believed (Decisions, &c. p. 165) all the Universities in the world were so constituted.”—None of the American are so. The Scottish have no separate jurisdiction, no peculiar privileges. The Town Council even appoint its Professors. The literary Institutions of Lausanne, the Schools, Colleges, and Academy, are under the Professors and citizens, conjointly. Essay Statist. sur la Canton de Vaud.

† It deserves to be observed, that the University of Paris, which so academical discipline, and pleas between party and party, where either was a member of the University, or the servant of one, the proceedings were not to be according to the rules and forms of the Common Law; and crimes of a higher nature, felony, murder, and the like, might be transferred to the court of the High Steward, by whom, with his proper officers and jurors, half being gownsmen and half townsmen, they might be tried by the laws of the land, and the customs of the University, that is, by certain rules of the Civil Law, our University-Courts having been accustomed to the Civil-Law process long before the Reformation.

With respect, however, to the Crown, the more immediate subject of these remarks, it does not appear that by virtue of the Roman Civil Law it acquired any new prerogatives, for as from the earliest Saxon times our princes sat in ecclesiastical courts, and took the precedence*, so, as already has been shewn in our History of Cambridge, and in strongly resembled those of England in their general course of studies and academical discipline, yet preserved a striking difference with respect to the Civil Law: Le Droit Civil non seulement y etoit peu cultive, mais lorsq' il voulut s'y introduire, l'entree lui en fut interdite par une bulle expresse d'Honorius III., et cette defense a subiste jusq. en 1679; en sorte que si on l'enseignoit a Paris, ce n'etoit, si je l'ose dire, que furtivement, et en fraude, et parce que son utilite prevaloît contre la disposition des Loix. Origines de l'Universite de Paris, a la fin de l'Histoire, Tom. VII. p. 104. Mons. Crevier, though a liberal and learned man, was, probably, too good a Catholic to assign the true reason for this neglect of the Civil Law in the University of Paris. The Popes were, in short, too quick-sighted and alive to their own interests, not to perceive that the absolute authority of the Civil Magistrate, countenanced by the Civil Law, militated against their own absolute ecclesiastical claims. For this reason, it was, that the Popes were ever solicitous to have the Decretals (and, in part, they succeeded) studied in our Universities. Priv. Cam. p. 32.

* This is clear, as well from what has just been hinted, as from the Titles and Prefaces to several of the most ancient constitutions of our Anglo-Saxon laws, and from several of the laws themselves; in Bishop Wilkins' Ll. Anglo-Saxonica, Ecclesiastica et Civiles.

these volumes of Privileges, they were the supreme head of our academical body. But, if they acquired no new prerogatives, they were taught to speak with a higher tone, and to hold a tighter rein. Queen Elizabeth's statutes, we may see, begin in the most authoritative, imperial style, in imitation evidently of the Proœmium of Justinian's Institutes *. But I have sufficiently enlarged on this subject in the History of Cambridge.

It may, perhaps, be thought by some, that in our HISTORY an undue stress has been laid on the Statutes of the University not being confirmed by an Act of Parliament; so no particular stress is laid on it here. For, whether the charter of the same Queen being confirmed by the Parliament, the Statutes, with all other of her public instruments, relating to the University, were, as Serjeant Millar expresses it, "considered as being confirmed in the gross," or, that the broad seal annexed to them was supposed to be tantamount to a ratification by Parliament, or, that they were to be received as the legal declarations of the head and supreme visitor of a literary corporation, or, that it was advised by the great lawyers of that period as more according to the forms and spirit of the Imperial Roman Law, and as even authorized by an Act of Parliament—whatever might be the reason, all intended to be insisted on here, is, that Elizabeth's statutes are founded on the principles of the Civil Law, the Queen acting, in giving them, propriâ regali auctoritate. This is, probably, the ground of the distinction. For the right in both cases would probably be defended by some as standing on the same ground. And here, in passing, we may conceive on what principles the Tudor and Stuart families acted in making so free with the laws and liberties of the University, as they are now pretty generally understood to have done. For something more than mere pretences they had. They were all, we may be sure, instructed in the leading principles of the Civil Law, the prevailing study of those times. Their defenders maintained, that the prince, who may of his own grace give laws, may repeal or dispense with oaths, and, that the same power that confers a privilege may take it away*. Hence it was, no doubt, that (although occasional interferences occurred in the private matters of Colleges, before the Reformation) in the exercise of such authorities these princes set no bounds. From the Histories both of Oxford and Cambridge, innumerable instances might be produced, whereby, though our princes acted contrary to the acknowledged maxims of the Common Law, their advocates confidently defended them on the principles of the Civil; as in cases of cancelling oaths and obligations, of appeals, of arbitrary decisions, of appointing to offices, of voiding elections, and other matters of what was supposed to concern private property, in which the plaintiff, in a Common Law court†,

* The King's Visitatorial Power asserted, &c. in the Visitation of Mag. College, by Dr. Johnson, chap. 3. Cujus est condere, ejus est destruere, is a maxim of the Civil Law, as quoted by the above writer, p. 135.

† It must not be supposed that I am undertaking to decry the peculiar excellencies of the Civil Law, which are proclaimed in the praises and practice of almost all Europe, by whom it was admitted as a kind of Jus Gentium: its admirers are rather left in full possession of Gravina's testimony in its favour: Quænam est autem Ars, quænam facultas, cui tanta eruditio sit implicata, quantam complectitur jurisprudentia civilis, ex qua nativa rerum singularum vocabula, et arcana Latinitatis, et selectiora dicendi genera ducuntur, et recondita notitia vetustatis eruitur, et Scientia temporum atq. factorum, non communis illa quidem et vulgata, sed sanctior atq. selectior, ita ut unius jurisprudentiæ studium Græcam atq. Romanam eruditionem trahat universam. Gravina Origines Juris Civilis, as quoted by Dr. Irving, in Observations on the Study of the Civil Law. Our learned Thomas Baker, who, in his Character of Complainant on the Insufficiency of all Learning, ch. xiii. finds sufficient fault with the original compilers, the glossers, commentators, and critics of the Roman Civil Law; yet admits would have had just cause to complain of what is called, the Exitum Placiti; but they presumed that on the principles of the Justinian Code, the Roman Civil Law, Initium et finis legum eruditionis a voce principali procedere*: but methinks they triumphed too hastily: for, here it will be recollected, that a distinction is to be made between a state of things, in which a prince acts as head and public reformer, in a critical period, of all bodies politic, (as Harry the VIIIth, Edw. VI. Queens Mary and Elizabeth, are understood severally to have done), and one that is settled, and under particular regulations, for ascertaining rights, and securing person and property: but their advocates made no such distinctions; they maintained, that all alike was subject to the will and pleasure of the sovereign, and that, in fact, his dispensing with law, was law. The case then of the Vice-President and Fellows of Magdalen, though a very gross exercise of the civil prerogative, cannot be conceived to have been a solitary one; examples of the royal proceedings in inferior cases and less magnitude were directed by the same its general excellence; and, as he well expresses it, “the Roman laws have lived longer, and spread wider than their arms ever did, and the conquests of their wisdom have been greater than those of their power.” Its particular excellence (unnoticed by Baker) was its service against the encroachments of the decretals, those ecclesiastical laws of the Roman Pontiffs, very injurious to the rights of princes: so that when they opposed the Civil Law, as they sometimes did, it was, strictly speaking, the Canon, not the Civil Law, (which were much intermingled) that they meant to discourage; though at the same time we must not forget that the Civil Law itself was much at variance with the Common Law, that bulwark of the English liberties; and, hence the famous protestation of the English Lords, on a proposal to admit the Civil Law in a case even favourable to their particular interests and passions, “Omnes Comites et Barones unâ voce responderunt, quod Nolumus Leges Angliæ mutari.” rule, and supported from the testimony of eminent civilians, and on the acknowledged temper and practice of the Civil Law.

Bona fides tantundem possidenti præstat, quantum veritas, quoties lex impedimento non est, is a rule of Ulpian's * for the Civil Law; of which a striking illustration was made in a decree lately passed at Doctors Commons. It concerns our Universities as under the dispensing power of Q. Elizabeth.

The case is as follows: the Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge, made an appeal to the Bishop of Lincoln, their visitor, against the Provost and Fellows of Eton College, that they had been in the habit of holding ecclesiastical preferment contrary to the statutes of their founder, in violation of oaths taken by them, and to the injury of King's College. The Appeal of King's College, &c. was lately published, and also the Report of the Proceedings, by Mr. Williams. The case was argued with much ingenuity by learned civilians and common lawyers on both sides, as well in reference to the original intention and statutes of the royal founder, as to a dispensation of Queen Elizabeth, authorizing the Fellows of Eton to hold preferments with fellowships, and further, on the principles both of the civil and common law. The learned visitor, assisted by learned assessors, Sir William Grant, Master of the Rolls, and Sir John Scot, pronounced against the appeal, and declared that the Fellows of Eton College were enabled to hold one benefice by virtue of the dispensation, but further enjoined all future Fellows of Eton College not to exceed the indulgence granted by the dispensing statute of Elizabeth.

On the decree itself, as right or wrong, I venture to give no opinion, and shall make but little of remark on the case:

—I shall only observe, that in the Eton statutes there is not only one by the founder forbidding Fellows to hold preferments with their fellowships, but another, declaring it unlawful for any of his heirs, the kings of England, or the Bishop of Lincoln, to alter or dispense with them. Yet we see that even the statutes of a Royal Founder (Hen. VI.) were superseded by a dispensation of Elizabeth's, and the Fellows of Eton, by virtue of that, were enabled to hold one living. The decree then must at least have proceeded on these principles, (and perhaps presumed some others) that Henry VI. though even a king, was to be considered merely as a private founder; that the mandate or dispensation of Elizabeth was at the time contemplated as the act of the supreme head, and her will, as law, paramount to by-laws, and removing all impediment, in the strict sense of the Civil Law;

Quod Regi placuit Legis habet Vigorem.

One observation, however, I shall take leave to extract from Remarks Critical and Explanatory of Mr. Williams's Report of the Proceedings of the said Case; "that as a legal case it cannot be of any use, as the dispensing power was not entered into with sufficient depth of research by the Council, and the Assessors, possibly as sitting in a court of no authority, but certainly, for reasons best known to themselves, declined the explanation of their sentiments." But from the decree of the visitor we may infer the opinion of the assessors, which probably was, that though the principle of a dispensing power may not be relished now, yet that in the time of Elizabeth it was considered legal, that is, consonant to the rules of the civil law, the law which still, in conformity with the statutes both of Edward the Sixth and of Queen Elizabeth, governs the courts of our Universities.

3. With regard to ecclesiastical power. — Though the Universities are now lay corporations, yet the Crown claimed over them ecclesiastical authority. Passing what relation it bore to these bodies, in this respect, in more early times, it is well known that when Hen. VIII. stripped the Pope of his spiritual prerogatives in this country, he invested himself with them. By virtue of the Act of Supremacy, he dissolved religious houses, introduced six articles, "oppressing," as Hume expresses it, "to both (religious) parties, Catholics and Protestants, called the bloody bill; empowered commissioners, Lord Cromwell and others, most of them laymen, to reform Universities, and to give statutes to them, as he had to Cardinal Wolsey before, though the fall of the latter prevented the completion." Wood's Hist. et Ant. Ox. L. 1, p. 247, &c. and burnt two of their greatest ornaments, Sir Thomas More, an Oxford man, and Bishop Fisher, who was almost the founder of St. John's, Cambridge, for not acknowledging his supremacy:—both Universities there had surrendered to Hen. VIII. all their charters and bulls, and the latter were never returned; so he gave them, with their statutes, a new grant of Privileges, and inflicted ecclesiastical punishment, as well as secular, annulling all bulls and other instruments, which had antecedently been given by Popes; for though he found that the triple crown, as one neatly expresses it, "could not solder well with the English," yet he thought that ecclesiastical supremacy, a jewel taken from that triple crown, would adorn and dignify his own: and Hooker well knew how far its influence extended; for it is in the book, where he speaks of the authority of making laws, and in reference to the supremacy, when he says, "the civil magistracy hath the power of making laws, yea laws concerning the most spiritual affairs of the church *."

* Eccles. Pol. B. 8. A very curious paper on this subject, together with two Letters to the University of Oxford, may be seen among the Records at

In virtue of the same power, the Supremacy, Edw. VI. under guidance of the Protector, Duke of Somerset, and his Councils, ordered 42 articles of faith to be drawn up for the clergy, passed two* acts for the uniformity of the Common Prayer, and the administration of the Sacraments†, and another for abstinence from flesh‡ in Lent; he punished for religious opinions, passed an act for the marriage of priests, and gave various other directions for the government of the church: and with respect to Universities, the Duke of Somerset, under his authority, sent commissioners to Oxford; he passed an act, by which as he aimed to reform Chantries Collegiate, so also “to convert to good and godly uses, our Universities;” and as he appointed 32 persons§ to make ecclesiastical laws for the government of the church, so did he others, to compose statutes|| for the University, agreeable to them; both works alike appertaining, as it was thought, to the province of the supreme magistrate, as head of the church.

Though the supremacy of Mary¶ was reclaimed by the Pope under Mary, and by her willingly restored, and the act itself repealed, and never afterwards restored, yet she retained enough of the power to dispossess the Protestant bishops of their ecclesiastical preferments, and to persecute most bitterly for religious opinions. In our Universities she empowered Cardinal Pole, who was at the same time legate from the Pope and her Metropolitan Archbishop of Canterbury, to appear at Cambridge, in order to promote another reformation, to give new statutes*, and, to borrow the idle conceit of a divine of that period, “to open the Pole† of the heavens” there, as well as upon the church. She and Pole thought they had as great a right to consider their new arrangements in the University a Reformation, as Hen. VIII. and Edw. VI. had theirs; and, though Queen Elizabeth reformed them back again to Protestantism, yet the more sanguine Catholics were fully persuaded, that their Reformation would again have its turn ‡.

Queen Elizabeth was a princess of superior abilities, of great strength of character in herself, and much discernment in the choice of her ministry. Her ruling passion was love of power; “and in her family, in her court, and in her kingdom, she remained equally mistress.” Hume.—In spiritual and ecclesiastical matters, she exercised as full legislation and jurisdiction as Hen. VIII. She melted down the 42 articles of Edward into 39; ordered the re-establishment, with some alterations, of the Liturgy; deposed bishops, created new ecclesiastical courts, and guarded religious opinions with penal sanctions, at her pleasure.

With respect to many private colleges, it might seem unnecessary to observe, that she superseded statutes, which she † Alludes to a most idle pun of the Archdeacon of Canterbury, where Cardinal Pole slept the first night, on his road from Dover, when he arrived in England;—in a Latin oration, the Dean thus addressed him: “Tu es Polus, qui aperis nobis Polum Cælorum.” He repeated it in a funeral oration on Pole. O! salutarem illum Diem, quo Polus noster non dubito quin a cœlesti illo Pole missus nos Deo et Ecclesiæ reddidit. See Ludovico Beccatelli’s Life of Cardinal Pole, by Pye, p. 95.

‡ The curious MS. (penes me, and to which I have before referred) written in the time of Elizabeth, is distinctly entitled, “A Memorial of the Reformation in England.” There is a long chapter on the Reformation of the Universities, by a Council of the Reformation to be ordained by the authority of the Prince and Parliament with the consent of the See Apostolic.

never repealed, and which never have been repealed, and dispensed with oaths, which were understood to be sacred and obligatory. She appointed Cecil to visit Oxford. The privileges which she conferred on all the colleges, (the University at large) and the whole body of her statutes for Cambridge University, appear in these volumes; and it would be endless to dwell on particulars: Si qualis fuerit, velis scire, circumspice.

It may be said, then, that this princess acted under a three-fold capacity. The four first General Councils had settled what opinions were heretical; and heresy was punishable at common law: the University-Courts she settled, as Edw. VI.'s Council had also done, on the principles of the civil law*; and she exercised ecclesiastical authority by virtue of her headship or governorship of the church: for though the old Act of Supremacy, as passed under Hen. VIII. A. 26, was not restored, a new act, with the same powers, was passed by Elizabeth, under which she acted with great resolution and firmness.

Thus have we briefly considered the character of the King or Queen of England, in reference to common, civil, and ecclesiastical law; and, I apprehend, it is in this threefold relation, in which the supreme power stands in its visitatorial capacity towards the Universities.

To some it may appear, perhaps, that in the preceding statement of certain royal measures pursued, sufficient weight has not been laid on the several acts of Parliament, by which, it will be insisted, they were directed, and by which, it may be urged, they may be justified; and, acknowledge I also must, that for several of those measures acts of Parliament may be produced. Nay, even for that.

proceeding of Elizabeth's, of the legality and authority of which I have elsewhere expressed a doubt, I confess I find part of a clause in the act, A. 1<sup>mo</sup> Sect. 18, running thus—
 “ And that your highness, your heirs, and successors, kings or queens of this realm, shall have full power and authority, by virtue of this act, by letters patent under the Great Seal of England, to assign, name, and authorize, when and as often as your highness, your heirs, or successors, shall think meet and convenient, &c. to exercise, use, occupy, and execute, under your highness, &c. all manner of jurisdictions, &c. concerning any spiritual and ecclesiastical :” &c. and before any degrees in Universities were conferred, the candidate was to take this oath of supremacy. It may then plausibly enough be urged, that all such royal measures were defensible, and their sanctions binding, a national parliamentary act rendering them constitutional and legal.

And, it is most true, that a national Parliament, that is, a Parliament properly representing the three Estates of the realm, have a right to make laws. But it will, on the other hand, be asked by some, Were these Parliaments so constituted? and, did they speak the sense of the nation? May they not rather urge, that these Parliaments acted and spake in strict conformity to the will and wishes of the reigning Prince, however capricious those wishes, and however despotic that WILL might be?

Hume shall answer these questions. Of two acts of Hen. VIIIth's Parliament he remarks: “ The Parliament having thus resigned (by the Six Articles Act) all their religious liberties, proceeded to an entire surrender of their civil; and without scruple, by one act, a total subversion of the English Constitution. They gave to the King's Proclamation the same force as to a Statute enacted by Parliament; and to render the matter worse, if possible, they framed this law as if it were only declaratory, and were intended to explain the natural extent of the royal authority.” And again: “ There were ten Parliaments summoned by

Hen. VIII. and twenty-three sessions held. The whole time in which these Parliaments sat during this long reign exceeded not three years and a half. It amounted not to a twelvemonth during the first 20 years—All the king's caprices were indeed blindly complied with, and no regard was paid to the safety or liberty of the subject." So in the reign of Edw. VI. "A repeal, indeed," he observes, "of that destructive law was made, which rendered the King's Proclamation of equal force with a Statute, but they still abided by the principle." And again: "A session of Parliament was held (Nov. 4th), and, as it was the usual maxim of that assembly to acquiesce in every administration which was established, the Council dreaded no opposition from that quarter."

Elizabeth's ideas of the extent and plenitude of the royal power was not less exalted than those of her predecessors; and she steered the course of her administration by them. She managed her parliaments at her own discretion. Hume, in speaking of the two most memorable bills passed in her reign, observes, "This point being gained, a bill was next introduced, annexing the supremacy to the Crown; and, though the Queen was there denominated Governess, not Head, of the Church, it conveyed the same extensive power, which, under the latter title, had been exercised by her father and brother: all the bishops strenuously opposed it.—By this act, the Crown, without the concurrence either of the Parliament, or even of the Convocation, was vested with the whole spiritual power."

Speaking of the other bill, which was of a civil nature, he remarks, "the Commons made a sacrifice more difficult to obtain than any articles of Faith.—The House in no instance departed from the most respectful deference and complaisance to the Queen:" Fine spun words, with a coarse, broad meaning!

DISSERTATION.

Bishop Hurd, who has ably pointed out*, how Hume has confounded the administration of Government with the English Constitution, to serve as an apology for the tyranny of the Stuarts, has, in the person of Mr. Addison, given a summary of the character and conduct of Elizabeth. He introduces him remarking, and asking: "Her government appears to me, in many instances, oppressive, and highly prejudicial to the ancient rights and privileges of her people. For what other construction can we make of her frequent interpositions to restrain the counsels of their representatives in parliament; threatening some, imprisoning others, and silencing all, with the thunder of her prerogative? Or, when she had suffered their counsels to ripen into bills, what shall we say of her high and mighty rejections of them, and that not in single and extraordinary cases, but in matters of ordinary course, and by dozens†!"

The same writer, in conclusion, rounds the splendour of this princess's character with the following encomium of her by Lord Chancellor Bacon; Illud cogitandum censeo, in quali populo imperium tenuerit: si enim in Palmyrenis, aut Asiâ imbelli et molli imperium sortitasset, minus mirandum fuisset; verum in Angliâ, natione ferocissimâ et bellicosissimâ, omnia Ex Nutu Fœminæ moveri et cohiberi potuisse, summam merito admirationem habet ‡." Now I have not been aiming to detract any thing from the splendours of the Queen, nor would I from the admiration of Lord Bacon; but to point out the influence and efficacy of that princess's self-will, by which she so controlled and governed her parliaments.

There are indeed a few instances, in which parliaments were not so compliant with the royal will; this was particularly the case in Mary's reign: but even then an expedient was always ready to their hand. For, to the power of control over parliaments must be added another, (one, which as occasion has required, has ever rendered most important services to the Crown) which the Tudors well knew how and when to use; which was, if they could not readily manage a parliament, they could immediately dissolve it; thus killing, where they could not command.

I have ranged, perhaps, discursively on this matter, yet not altogether without reason, as, I hope, will hereafter appear.

To a state of things, in sundry particulars, settled by the Princes of the Tudor family, succeeded James I. of the Stuarts. Being supreme head of the church, he called himself "the great Schoolmaster of his Realm," and his admirers called him Solomon, of whom (Solomon) it is recorded, "that he appointed the priests their changes in the service of God, and that they departed not from his service in any matters*." James, accordingly, nominated bishops, delivered some rules to be observed in translating the Scriptures; prescribed what points of doctrine were not to be preached; and punished erroneous teachers: he also presided, and moderated, in the Hampton Court† Conference, and ordered Canons for the direction of the clergy, which, in like manner as Edw. VI.'s, were never confirmed by Parliament. In our Universities, he stretched this branch of the prerogative, the Supremacy, to a point, which it had scarcely reached under any other of our princes. This prince imposed on those who take degrees at our Universities a sub-

† This famous Conference between the Episcopalians and Puritans, held at Hampton Court in 1602, was engaged in the points in dispute between the two parties. scription to what he quaintly called, his three darling articles. For, though there had been oaths of office, and obedience, of allegiance and supremacy, and of compliance with the use of the Liturgy before, and though the clergy had been called to subscribe to articles of their religious belief, in their clerical capacities, yet for degrees in our Universities, which are indeed civil distinctions, before his time, no such very rigid subscription had been required. For his Majesty's three darling articles not only included an oath of submission to his civil and ecclesiastical supremacy, but of a belief in all the doctrinal articles and ecclesiastical discipline of the Church of England*.

The assumptions of the Tudor and Stuart race of princes, and the complaisance of Parliaments, serious evils in themselves at the time, became no less serious in their consequences. The former having persuaded themselves, that they might by their own authority alter the laws†, that parliaments were created for them, and not for the people, employed them to their own purposes, and turned them into instruments, not of security and protection of the people, but of their oppression. While the latter, taught the doctrines of servility, were prevailed on to yield to every royal demand, to a supposed prerogative; and made a surrender of the people's most sacred liberties: hence parliaments became little more than nominal institutions, mere registers of the royal pleasure: till men, being taught by their oppressions to reason, and there being some men of principle and conscience in parliament, they found it necessary to be less complaisant: then Cha. I. instead of calling frequent‡ parliaments, and suffering them to be judges of what was right, and correctors of what was wrong (agreeably to his coronation * oath), was determined—to check all reasonings, and silence all consciences—on having no parliaments at all†: for ten years he ruled without calling one parliament. Hence sprang our terrible civil wars, in the event of which Charles I. lost his life, as, in following principles much allied to his father's, James the II<sup>d</sup> did his crown.

The theory, then, by which the Stuart family regulated their practice towards our Universities, after its settlement under Elizabeth, was one composed of a semblance of some good principles of our Common Law, matted and disfigured by those of the Civil, and enforced by the sanction of a supreme ecclesiastical authority. By this, James I. ‡, as we have seen, on merely signifying his pleasure, imposed his Articles, which concerned every graduating member of the University; and debarring the Fellows of King's gation to be entered on here; but that they were very frequent at the time in which many writers place their beginning, after Hen. III's time, see "Dugdale's Summons of the Nobility," &c.

Even from what old Chancellor Fortescue speaks of parliaments in his time (Hen. VI.'s reign) it must follow, that they were called very frequently: Et si statuta hæc, tantâ solennitate et prudentiâ edita, non esse contingant efficaciam tantæ, quantæ conditorum cupiebat intentio, concilio reformari ipsa possunt, at non sine communitatis et procerum Regni illius assensu, quali ipsa primitus emanarunt. College* of the power to choose their provost, which they received from their founder, being bound to proceed in their mode of choosing according to oath, he assumed the right of nomination to himself. By this, Cha. I. authorized Archbishop Laud to make a visitation of Oxford, in his metropolitical character, as Archbishop†, rather than as Chancellor; and by this, he dispensed with the statutes of Emmanuel College, in opposition to the Master and Fellows, pleading the obligation of their oaths‡. By this, Cha. II. in a Letter directed to the Master and Fellows of Trin. Col. Cambridge, appointed R. P. fellow, contrary to the wishes of the fellows, in whom the appointment lay, and pleading the regulations by which they were bound to act on oath: and by this, James II. as already has appeared, ejected Dr. Hough and the Fellows of Magdalen College, by Proceedings before the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs.

The Revolution in 1688 introduced into the nation at large, as well as into our Universities, feelings more genuine, and principles that were deemed more liberal and constitutional, though not so liberal nor favourable to the liberties of the people, as some of its friends wished and expected it to have been. But a great advancement in the cause of civil and religious liberty was undoubtedly made; those assumptions of power so uniformly acted on by the Tudors and Stuarts, and by James the Second so recently, were, both in general and in particular instances, declared to be illegal, and contrary to the laws and liberties of this kingdom; viz. in general, that of assuming and exercising a power of suspending laws, and the execution of them, without the consent of Parliament; and in particular, that of issuing, and causing to be issued, commissions under the Great Seal, for erecting a court for ecclesiastical causes; of violating the freedom of elections; and of prosecuting in the Court of King's Bench causes cognizable only in parliament. These, and similar violations on the known laws and statutes of the realm, were pronounced to be arbitrary and illegal; and James having abdicated, the crown was declared vacant, &c.

The Declaration of Rights, as this Act was called *, is enacted in the most general terms (with the exception of its opposition to Popery, necessary perhaps at the time for self-defence and public security), as presenting the true, ancient, and indubitable rights and liberties of the people of this kingdom. The former oaths of allegiance and supremacy were abrogated; and, instead of them, By all officers and ministers, who should serve their Majesties, two oaths were taken, one called the Oath of Allegiance to their present Majesties, the other the Abjuration Oath, renouncing the dethroning power and spiritual supremacy of the Pope, as then held by the Papists.

It may be observed, that, though the old act of supremacy was by this declaration abolished, there is no mention made of any headship or supremacy as being ecclesiastical, claimed by, or for, the King. The King, by education, perhaps, was not fond of the title, nor prepared to receive it, though, at the same time, all the titles, honours, and jurisdictions, formerly belonging to the Crown, are asserted for him; and it is also certain, that he must have executed in his regal office many of those acts, which were supposed to have been branches of the ecclesiastical power; and that the King is still by act of Parliament, in all causes, and over all persons, ecclesiastical, as well as civil, supreme.

Nor is notice taken either of the Clergy* or Dissenters, though the former do now, and did much then, favour it; and the latter have been friends to it from the beginning. Neither does it contain any mention of Universities, nor any other corporations; though in its last clause their privileges are secured to them: "Provided, that no charter, or grant, or pardon, granted before the three and twentieth day of October, in the year of our Lord 1689, shall be any where impeached or invalidated by this Act." And it is supposed that the case of the Vice-President and Fellows ejected from Magdalen College by James II. was under view in a clause of this act: and accordingly Dr. Hough, the ejected Vice-President, was made Bishop of Worcester by King William, and the ejected Fellows were restored.

The Parliament that passed this famous act has been called the Convention-Parliament.

* It should be considered, that the body of the established clergy had taken the oath of allegiance to James, which, though they afterwards abjured (and many of them no doubt most conscientiously) yet many, as conscientiously at least, abided by, who were therefore called Nonjurors. The writings of the Protestant Clergy of those times heartily (as might be expected) favour the Revolution. See more particularly those of Bishop Burnet (through whom it was that Dr. Tillotson was made Archbishop of Canterbury) and Bishop Hoadley: and, of a later period, Bishop Hurd's Moral and Political Dialogues. Dial. v. vi. Locke's Treatises on the English Government may be said to be declaratory of the principles of the Revolution in 1688, and the Dissenters came into them, as was very natural, immediately and uniformly. I allude more particularly to what Locke says on the Origin of kingly Government, in his Treatises on Government. See Peircii Vindic. Nonconformistarum: and, in more modern times, Dr. Price's and Dr. Kippis's Sermons, before the Society for commemorating the glorious Revolution, contain, I believe, the views, in general, of the Dissenters. The Revolution in 1688 may, therefore, be considered as the cause of Protestantism against Popery at the time; how far it is suited to the wants of the present is a subject on which no opinion is given here; I have, however, ventured to give one in the 8d edit. of Four Letters on the English Constitution.

Any objections that may have been made, and by whatever party, to the competency of the persons that constituted this parliament, or to any of their subsequent measures, fall not within the scope of these observations. Suffice it now, that it's declared purport and genuine spirit are favourable to English liberty, in opposition to the arbitrary administration of the preceding reigns. Mr. Burke * has weakened his own argument on this subject by his blundering interpretation of the words "submitting their heirs and posterities, for ever." He knew, or ought to have known, this is merely the accustomed mode of speech, in royal charters and acts of parliament, and means nothing more than that while such charters and acts of parliament remain unrepealed by any subsequent act, the preceding act is universally in force; though an act which may follow can, and does, immediately abrogate the act to which it is opposed, that went before. As to this declaration of rights, it has hitherto remained unrepealed, and therefore must be considered as declaratory of the leading principles of our constitution, and as abrogating any preceding acts repugnant to them.

The final visitatorial authority therefore over our English Universities having hitherto been exercised by the supreme executive magistrate, moving according to the direction of the common law of England, (with, it must be acknowledged, something of a glare thrown around it by the civil law of the Roman Emperors, and the ecclesiastical supremacy of the Roman Pontiff) readers must have observed, (and it is scarcely necessary to warn them of it here) that in these Dissertations the words King, Queen, his, or her Majesty, the Crown, the Supreme Power, and the like expressions, have hitherto been used indifferently, and as synonymous with the Authority of the Supreme executive Magistrate, who, as an English king, must act cum assensu parliamenti; so that, in short, this authority must be resolved, and such is the language which, more particularly in these times, should be used, into, The Supreme authority of Parliament: I say more particularly in these times, because, to repeat Lord Mansfield's words, it is most certain now, that the corporations of the Universities are lay-corporations, and therefore not naturally cognizable according to ecclesiastical regimen, now, however, they might be in Popish times: I say, in these times, in reference to the authority of Parliament, to what Judge Blackstone means by the omnipotence of Parliament, as laid down at the Revolution, in opposition to any illegal acts, and unintelligible claims merely regal: and I say in these times, because the civil law, as followed in any of our courts, rests solely, as it were, by a sort of grace, on the sanction of the common law, having no further force, than as it agrees with that, or is supported by acts of Parliament*; and, because the Canons (either Edw. VIth's or James I's) not having been sanctioned by Parliament, they have been thought not to be obligatory on the laity, and make no part of the Lex Terræ.

As a famous author, and a sincere Royalist, before the Revolution, has expressed this idea so clearly, we may sum the matter up in his words:—"The Parliament itself," says Mr. Prynne, "to speak properly, is the true real founder and establisher of both Universities, they being incorporated, and made capable to sue, purchase, and enjoy, all their Privileges and Lands, without controversy, only by an act of Parliament in the 13th year of Eliz. Rot. 36, the title whereof is only mentioned in the printed acts; therefore the Parliament, being the true founders of it, have best right to visit it by common law †."

† The University of Oxford printed "A Plea of Privileges," at the time, when the Parliament were about to appoint a visitation there. Mr. Prynne published, "The University of Oxford's Plea refuted; or, a full Answer to a late printed paper, entitled the Privileges of the University of Oxford in point of Visitation; a work already alluded to. Parliament had

Thus much for the relation which the Chief Magistrate, or rather the supreme legislative authority, the High Court appointed a visitation of both Universities about the same time. Mr. Prynne was one of the visitors for Oxford; and a sincere royalist he most undoubtedly was (as appears from his famous SPEECH in Parliament (Parl. Hist. of England, Dec. 14th, 1648) "Touching the King's Answer to the Propositions of both Houses upon the whole Treaty, in opposition to the Army's Remonstrance." Yet he was a sincere Presbyterian too: and the Solemn League and Covenant was not the casket in which the inestimable jewel of religious liberty could be deposited, any more than James 1st's three darling Articles. Of neither one nor the other may we say—

That was the casket of Heaven's choicest store.

And a home-thrust, made by a certain writer, while defending the arbitrary measures of James II. at Oxford, will have as much force, when applied to the Presbyterian party engaged against the Prelatical, as to the Prelatical, when they engaged against the Puritans; "His Majesty (or some such words, for I quote from memory) has taken care that no such evils shall be inflicted on you, as you have inflicted on your opponents."

Mr. P. says, after Mr. A. Wood, that Oxford was a University at least 300 years before Alfred; which assertion, though a little nearer the truth than what has been said of Cambridge, is yet far enough from it, as not resting on sufficient evidence.

He says, "that no King of England before Hen. VIII. ever visited either University for aught that appears by ancient records." Yet, indeed, I must think, that Ric. II. visited Cambridge. Under him there appears to have been a General Review of the Powers, Defects, and Privileges, of the University; A. 1377. A. 1<sup>mo</sup> Ric. II. as the readers of our Privileges may see, "Petitiones Cancellarii et Scholarium in Parlamento exhibitæ pro quibusdam Defectibus in Chartis privilegiorum suorum perficiendis, p. 21. The year after, the Charta Amplissima, confirming all former Charters and Privileges, may be seen, and various other commissions, petitions, &c. relating to the Processus Barnwellensis, the Chancellor's excommunications, and other matters, which intimately concerned the academical body; and this was all followed by a Parliament, summoned by the King at Cambridge, p. 26, "Literæ Regis de Summonitione apud Cantabrigiam, una cum Convocatione Cleri ibidem. A. R. 12. This seems, therefore, to have been a Royal Visitation. And, if I mistake not, Hen. III's visit to Cambridge was of the same character; for as that appears to have been a memorable period for settling the academical discipline, and government, so at the end of that reign is found, An Historiola de Adventu Regis of Parliament, bears to our English Universities, in their present state; and a right apprehension of this relation may

Hen. III. in Villam Cantabrig. et de quibusdam propugnaculis a se positis. Privileges, p. 8.

But to speak truly, it was not merely Hen. VIIIth's presence at Oxford which constituted a royal visitation. Edw. the VIth's Breve Citatorium (A. 1549, Priv. Cantab. p. 47, 48) Cancellario et procuratoribus transmissum quod compareant coram visitatoribus Regis, constituted a royal visitation at Cambridge as much as the presence of Hen. VIII. accompanied with Wolsey, his commissioner, could at Oxford.

In reply to the "University of Oxford's Plea," that it was their privilege to be visited only by kings, Mr. P. shews that Chancellors, and Vice-Chancellors, and Archbishops, have made visitations. And there is evidence for this also in the Privileges of Cambridge. They visited in their local, or metropolitical capacities. But does this really affect the question of supreme visitation?

An Oxford writer, (who, if I mistake not, means to speak after Mr. Prynn) says, there was no visitation of our Universities by commission till the time of Hen. VIII. I doubt whether this is speaking quite correctly, no visitation, (and there had been several) having been without his permission at least, and two, as we shall presently see, had the royal and parliamentary sanction. By turning to p. 52 of the Privileges, we may see that besides the licences and commissions (heads of which are printed in that volume) there are, in the 3d volume of the Vice-Chancellor's copy of Hare, above 20 more commissions (which seem principally to concern the Chancellor and heads) that are not in the Register's copy: they are, as it is there (p. 52) expressed in the same form as this, Commissio de Pace Conservanda in Villa et Suburbiis Cant. salvâ jurisdictione Cancellarii Universitatis." What they relate to, I cannot positively say, not having examined them; but it appears they run up to a very early period. With respect to those visitations made by Archbishop Arundel A. 20 Ric. II. and 13 Hen. IV. one was undertaken by the counsel and direction of the King; and with respect to the other, it was confirmed by Parliament, and therefore had the force of an act of Parliament. The patent, too, for the former has these words—Salvis nobis et hæredibus nostris omnibus aliis quibus in Universitate prædicta nos et progenitores nostri uti consuevimus temporibus retroactis; and the latter, the Archbishop's petition, "A le Roy supplie v're Chapleyn Th. A. de Cant. Qe Plese a vous Sr. par Assent de ses Espûels et Temp. et les coëns in ceste pr. Parl. de Grauntier, &c." and the Schedule subjoined, relate to exemptions, by virtue of Popes' Bulls, (particularly that of Boniface the 8th) which therefore that Parliament annulled; so that these matters were thenceforth to proceed regularly here, under the sanction of our own supreme legislative authority, as the Viceseem to render all further observations on the subject unnecessary. But let us proceed. Let us view this matter in Chancellor's court itself could, by charter, take cognizance of certain causes, which in ordinary cases fell under the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Archbishop: which is the principle on which the Letter from the Vice-Chancellor to the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs proceeds, Oct. 4, 1562, as well as, Literæ Academicæ ad Archiepiscopum aliosq. iudices in causis Ecclesiasticis, &c. MSS. C. C. C. 106. 228—Ibid. 336.

These cases, therefore, I humbly think, do not much assist Mr. Prynne's argument; of this too he must have been aware himself; for he makes his authority as visitor to the University of Oxford to depend on the broad seal of England; and in his Book, from which I have quoted, he calls the Parliament "the supreme visitors and reformers of all corruptions and abuses both in church and state;" and we see, that this very authority of Archbishop Arundel, just mentioned, rested on the same authority: and that Rich. II. paid no deference to any absolute archiepiscopal rights is evident; for he deprived this very prelate of his archbishopric; and, though Hen. IV. restored him, Rich. II. was inexorable, notwithstanding he was strongly solicited by the Pope himself. Parker, Archiep. De Antiq. Eccles. Brit. p. 407.

Archbishop Parker is the great authority for this archiepiscopal right of visiting the Universities, which he reckons among the Cantuariensis Sedis Privilegia & Prærogativa; ut sup. p. 37, and it is remarkable enough, that the only authorities appealed to by him are those just referred to A. 20, Ric. II. and 13 Hen. IV. (though several other visitations had been made) which shew, indeed, that the Pope's Bulls of Exemptions were annulled, and that the Universities were not thereby exempt from metropolitical visitations, (and according to Archbishop Parker's own account, Arundel's visitation was no more; In eadem Synodo Doctores Oxonienses quasdam Johannis Wiclyffi opiniones exposuerunt, quas Synodus condemnavit—deinde totam pene Provinciam visitando lustravit, ibid. p. 407. Nor was Archbishop Kilwardy's noticed by Bishop Godwin; Paulo postea Universam Provinciam visitavit et Academiam utramque. De Præsul. Angl. p. 97. Richardsoni Edit. So that Archbishop Arundel's case, strong as it may seem, does, by no means, reach that of the supreme visitatorial power, nor does it prove that the Archbishop possessed any absolute rights, as he expresses it elsewhere, in regard to this matter;—quæ legibus non sunt expressa—but rather the contrary; and, indeed, that instead of absolute rights, he acted even then under the counsel and direction of the King, and the authority of the supreme power.

Again. As to these metropolitical rights themselves—Archbishop Parker's PRIVILEGIA et PRÆROGATIVA (including his Right of Visitation of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge) they are either such as are held in common with other bishops, or, as Parker expresses it, rather strongly, are “absoluta, sibiq. peculiaris, quæ legibus expressa non sunt.” They were, indeed, bestowed by popes, or conceded by princes: but by whomsoever, they are now held in dependence, submission, and responsibility. If given by popes, it may be seen by the Act of Supremacy, and other acts passed in Hen. VIIIth’s reign, 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 25. 26 Hen. VIII. and others (some of which did but restore to the crown rights, which by other acts, of Rich. II. Hen. IVth and Vth, it possessed before) that the supremacy over all ecclesiastical causes and persons having been recovered by the Crown from the Pope, together with all the clerical privileges and prerogatives whatsoever, no portion of the power which the Pope had over the Archbishop, or which might have been supposed to have been his absolute prerogatives, were left invested in the Archbishop. It was further provided that in the case of monasteries, colleges, &c. exempt from episcopal power, and immediately subject to the Pope, the visitation “shall not be by the Archbishop, but by Commissioners to be nominated by the Crown,” and whether Universities were then considered as exempt or non-exempt, they all alike fell under its jurisdiction, and were visited by Commissioners nominated by the Crown.

The aforesaid act of Hen. VIII. was further confirmed by the Clergy’s “Act of Submission,” agreed to in the Clergy’s own Convocation. Nor does the Visitation afterwards, in Mary’s reign, of Cardinal Pole, whether as archbishop or as legate from the Holy See, affect this question at all; the whole powers of Henry’s supremacy being fully and firmly resettled in the Crown by the famous act, 1 Eliz. which restored to it the ancient jurisdiction over the state ecclesiastical and spiritual. So that all the privileges and prerogatives of the archbishops, with the clergy’s in general, were thus by Act of Parliament held Trinodâ necessitate.

Our princes and clergy well understood and felt the import of these several acts. Henry the VIIIth even appointed a layman (Lord Cromwell) as his vicegerent for ecclesiastical affairs, who, in that capacity, visited the Universities. Archbishop Cranmer’s Metropolitan Visitation for reforming the Religious Orders had the King’s licence*; and the Clergy, in their Address to Queen Elizabeth, disclaiming all self-will, acknowledged in comparison with her, “they were dead dogs† and fleas.” And notwithstanding Archbishop Parker's claim on paper of Privilegia absoluta, sibi peculiaria, et legibus non expressa, had he ventured to have acted in a metropolitical character without her licence, and still more, as Supreme Visitor, without her commission, she would undoubtedly (as she once threatened with an oath one of her bishops) have “unfrocked” him.

These expressions are, however, not alluded to here, for their ludicrousness and coarseness, but to shew, that ludicrous expressions may conceal serious acknowledgments, and that very coarse language may speak plain truths; and the fact is, the supremacy in all ecclesiastical causes, persons, and prerogatives, is now, by Act of Parliament, secured to the Crown: the Conge d'Elire, and the very pallium, ring, and pastoral staff, that is to say, all the spiritualities and temporalities of bishops are derived from the Crown; and Ordination—Confirmation—Spiritual Jurisdiction, and Rights of Visitation, are all commissions, from the legislature, and all performed, vice, nomine, et autoritate regali; and the Act of Homage, formerly paid to the Pope, now only to the King, at the consecration of archbishops and bishops, is a formal acknowledgment of such delegated authority. Visitations, by whomsoever made in our Universities, were, I apprehend, always by commission, either expressed or implied. Thus, when Lord Cromwell, the Chancellor, visited A. 27 Regni Hen. VIII. it was Injunctionibus Regiis (Priv. Cantab. p. 45), where he is called Visitator Generalis et Vice-gerens, et Universitatis Cancellarius. So when Dr. Parker, the Vice-Chancellor, and others, visited A. 37 Hen. VIII. it was by commission: MS. Bene't Col. CVI. 89. We find, too, by the Privileges of Camb. p. 136, that in those colleges which were not provided with a special visitor, the Chancellor, or, in his absence, the Vice-Chancellor, was appointed visitor; but this was settled by charta Jac. 1st A. 1604. All which acts imply a supreme visitatorial power in the king, given by him in commission to others. And even with respect to legantine visitations, in ancient times, under authority from the Pope, it was either by connivance, or permission, or licence, from the King, subject to his regulations and control, and, if they interfered with his prerogatives, or opposed his pleasure, they were interrupted and forbidden by the royal power. Several examples of the visitations of legates may be seen in Hare's Priv. of Oxford and Wood's Antiq. Oxon; and, with the explanatory circumstances, which bring them within the above theory, in Dr. Johnstone's Visitatorial Power Asserted, ch. iv. sect. 1. And, in short, with respect to what are called, the ordinary visitors, the conclusion drawn by the latter writer seems correct, with respect to Cambridge, as well as Oxford, “that whenever the visitations were made by the ordinary visitors, viz. the archbishop or bishops, it was about something relating to their functions, settled by the Canons, and allowed by the laws of the land; but still the last resort was made to the King, besides his first giving leave, as by many particulars is very clear."

It should seem, as if this right of supreme visitatorial power over our Universities is considered rather as a delicate subject; it being seldom noticed in our academical contests; nor, which is remarkable, even in our Civil Law-Courts, where the right of appeals, and of the Local Visitors, has sometimes passed under examination; nor, which is more remarkable still, is it once alluded to in that famous Opinion of an eminent lawyer (Lord Chancellor Hardwicke) referred to a few pages back, though the subject naturally, and almost necessarily, might seem to require it. But there can be no doubt where it legally and constitutionally now resides, by the known exercise of it on great occasions for final appeals, supreme jurisdiction, or national reformation, and by the distant acknowledgments of great legal authorities. Thus, when Lord Mansfield*, in Mr. Crawford's case, says, "the King's courts, if the Colleges do not exceed their jurisdiction, have no cognizance, no jurisdiction," it implies, that if they did, there was a higher supreme authority. So again, when Judge Blackstone, speaking of the seizure of the charter of the City of London by Charles and James the Second, adds, "though perhaps in strictness of law, the proceedings† in most of them were sufficiently regular," he means to say, if I understand him right, that the King, as supreme executive magistrate under Parliament, the primary founder of all corporations, and supreme visitor, has the power of conferring Privileges, and in a legal, constitutional manner, of taking them away, and that, with a salvo for the premises, the formalities in proceeding were not irregular. He is speaking in reference to his general ideas on corporations, which will equally apply to Universities.

These learned societies, then, as bodies corporate, deriving their existence and character from the State, are naturally guarded by its protection, and favoured by its servants. This partiality has appeared conspicuous, in the language of the Confirmations of their Privileges in successive reigns; in various Orders of the Privy Council; and in the Decisions in our courts of law; as may be seen particularly in the orders of Privy Council A. 12 James I. (see the Privileges, p. 138) and Lord Mansfield's Decisions in the by relative considerations, those which are nigh ; and we afterwards pass more naturally, sympathetically, and even somewhat prophetically, into the distant prospect. So it is with what concerns the fortune of human institutions. By comparing what has been with what is, and the nature of those powers, called into exercise, in the superintendence of them, man is apt to form inductions, as to what will or ought to be. His inductions, indeed, may be erroneously made ; or if made truly, he may not live to see them realized ; but if they are just, his convictions, at all events, may become a reasonable rule to his own conscience and conduct.

Monsieur Claude, in his Defence of the Reformation, among the French, proceeded therefore with much good sense : after shewing that the state of the government of the Latin Church, many ages before, had formed in their fathers prejudices relating to corruption in doctrine and disci-

Court of King's Bench, under the article, Universities. In our courts, both of Civil and Common Law, indeed, it is always usual to pay deference to their ancient charters, and local customs, and to refer their internal disputes to their own domestic jurisdiction, that all tediousness of delay and the danger of wasting their finances by expensive law-suits may be prevented. It is to be lamented, doubtless, (at least in my humble opinion) that the proceedings in our University-Court are so little according to the principle and forms of our Common Law. So, however, the law now stands. Still our Universities, in their present state, are (if I use a proper expression) national lay corporations, as our church is a national spiritual one. It may be presumed, therefore, that these learned bodies, in their turn, are not now, nor will at any future period be, ambitious of being subject to any jurisdiction merely spiritual, any more than they formerly were to a Popish usurpation. And, as our Laws and Constitution now stand, it does not appear likely, that any professional gentleman, of much judgment, should defend, any archbishop should undertake, either University be willing to acknowledge, or an English Parliament prepared to allow, any supreme visitation of these learned institutions without a sanction and commission from the supreme authority.

The subject on which I have here fallen, being one that has not been much gone into by many writers, if the principles should appear to be founded in truth, and to have any serious tendency, this digression, though long, will not, it is hoped, be deemed unnecessary.

pline, sufficient to induce them to examine their religion—and that the authority of the prelates of the Latin Church in binding them to a blind obedience, was unreasonable and unscriptural; after pointing out their abuses and corruptions, as admitted by their own friends*; after shewing, that their fathers, from what had passed for several ages, perceived no Reformation was to be expected from the Pope and the prelates; after these, and other similar preliminaries, he proceeds to shew, that on supposition, their fathers were right in their foundation, they were to be justified in setting on foot an Ecclesiastical Reformation, by providing for themselves and their posterity—not by amalgamating their discipline with the old establishment, which many efforts had proved to be fruitless and impossible, but by an entire separation from it, which, by differences of opinion, and opposition of interests, became absolutely necessary.

The Reformation in England was of a more mixed nature; and state-policy is often as conspicuous in it as religion. Accordingly, Bishop Burnet begins his History of the Reformation in a different manner from Claude. The Union of the Houses of York and Lancaster in K. Hen. VIII.; the King's successes in his wars; his relation to other civil powers; the factions in his council; the ambition and intrigues of his ministers; his quarrels with the Pope, about his divorce; the claim and rivalries between the crown and the mitre, in contests about ecclesiastical immunities;—these, and such-like disputes, principally of a secular nature, if not the original spring in that great work, the Reformation, were at least some of the principal wheels which kept the machine in motion: and, accordingly, these topics even take the precedence in Burnet's History.

Not, however, that religion was not the great pretence, though never even avowed as the only one: it, however, claimed the peerless pre-eminence. Wickliffe's faithful testimonies became powerful incentives; and his doctrines, which, though long suppressed, could not be extinguished, were the secret fire within, which gave spirit to the cause and, when it got free vent, spread a lustre and glory round it. Nor was this all: many eminent men of those times never professed to have raised the edifice to the height of which it was susceptible, but only so far as the politics of that period would let them*: they left their work, therefore, unfinished, but with a confidence that future times would carry it further. Hence it was, that old Latimer, alluding to the Reformation, says, in a Sermon before Edw. VI. "They say in my country, when they call the swine to the trough, Come to the mingle-mangle, come, peers, come; even so do some make mingle-mangle of the Gospel†." And Bonner, in reference to the remains of some of the Popish ceremonies, is said to have observed, "If they sup of our broth, they will soon eat of our beef‡."

But our business is only with the English Universities. These, as we have seen, originated in times, when impostures could be practised without danger or disgrace; when immoralities could easily obtain absolution; when politics and theology were immersed in profound errors: it cannot then be an unreasonable prejudice, to presume, they may retain some imperfections, some remnants of the errors of former times. It would be rashness, bordering on madness, to account every thing that is ancient unprofitable; but it would be weakness, to a degree of superstition, to approach each relique of antiquity with indiscriminate admiration and unqualified praise. There is the folly, no less than the wisdom, of ages. Ordinances of ancient appointment may be sometimes very wisely turned into new channels; they may take a very promising direction, and be made to administer to modern use: (as by a chemical process substances the most unpromising and apparently heterogeneous may be converted into salutary food) this, however, is not the ordinary course of things: more generally, each age has its appropriate wants, and requires its peculiar supplies; experience teaching us that, however many customs and laws may have suited the genius of former generations, for the purposes of the present their capacities fail; not corresponding to the taste, not satisfactory to the wants, of a more enlightened state of society. Should it be admitted that our reformers endeavoured to catch what Montesquieu calls the “general spirit” of the times, (the true criterion of the excellence of all political regulations) and to accommodate their proceedings to it, why should not modern politicians and reformers walk by the same rule? There is no other way of securing liberty*.

True it is, that these learned—let me add, without the suspicion of either adulation or of irony—venerable, institutions underwent a change, in many respects for the better, at the Reformation, and have always been eminently distinguished in the Annals of Literature: but it will, at the same time, be recollected, that they were adapted most strictly to the genius and character of that Reformation. So if the Reformation of our religion was itself incomplete, (and in the judgment of the reformers themselves, as we have just now shewn, it was so) we are not to expect, that our academical institutions were left perfect.

We must not be surprized then that our fathers at the Reformation, complained of these defects; nor that since, they have not ceased to complain; nor, that the attempts of our princes* to silence them by restrictions did but tend to make certain defects the more conspicuous, and the complaints of many learned and good men to appear more just and reasonable.

What Lord Mansfield observes of them must, I humbly conceive, be taken cum grano salis.

“There is a vast deal,” says his Lordship†, “of difference between a new charter given to a new Corporation, and a new charter given to a Corporation already in being, and acting either under a former charter, or prescriptive usage.—Whatever might be the notion of former times, it is most certain now, that the Corporations of the Universities are lay-corporations, and that the Crown cannot take away from them any rights that have been formerly subsisting in them under old charters or prescriptive rights!”

Now the Privileges of Universities, being simply those of Corporations, are Grants, either from Popes, Princes, or Parliaments: Bulls, is but another name for Popes Charters. And those powers which give charters can, though not arbitrarily, and without sufficient reason, take them away, on the principles both of the Civil Law and Common: and they have frequently done so. Ecclesiastical privileges and exemptions were given mostly by Popes, and they have been taken away by Popes and also by Kings and Parliaments. If, as Lord Mansfield's words seem to hold out (“according to the notions of former times”) these bodies were ever ecclesiastical Corporations, they became so mostly by virtue of Popish Bulls, and were confirmed such (for confirming a charter is the same as another creation) by royal charters: and we find that some of them were annulled by subsequent charters; that some things, savouring even of privileges were left out of Elizabeth's charters; and, that Hen. VIII. took away all the Popish; and for reasons weighty, legal, and authorized, viz. as being contrary to the laws and constitution of the realm. Cogent reasons also might subsist, or arise, and similar arguments would apply, with respect to lay Corporations. A violation of charters, unwarrantable, contrary to all justice, and wherein equity could give no support or relief; a discovery, that they had been conferred arbitrarily and iniquitously, or procured fraudulently, though the frauds might have been deemed pious; or a change in the laws, manners, religion, and turn of thinking in a country; such-like circumstances would justify, I conceive, the resumption of charters; (for as the King never dies, the same power which created would destroy) under these circumstances, government would but follow the order and nature of things *, the regular course of human events, which necessarily and immediately alters the relation of things. A state, that gives privileges, which are in reality mere acts of grace, (proceeding, as they often run, and as it is always implied, mero motu, speciali gratia et favore) and which * Legal science, strictly speaking, stands on the same ground, and has in view the same object, utility, as morals: ultimately it rests on certain principles, which Aristotle calls either Φυσικα or θιτικα: the former being of a speculative kind, which the mind of man perceives to be agreeable to the order and natural appearances of things; the latter practical, (which he calls, νομικα επιοικια) which appertain to human actions: Nic. Eth. L. 1. what he says of political science, as appearing, on account of the differences and injuries which it contemplates, to be νομω μικρον, φυσικη δε μεγαλη, applies more forcibly to jurisprudence, owing to the complicated nature of man, his various relations, conditions, transactions, altercations, and changeableness in the state of society, (and hence, particularly in the English Law—its numerous exceptions, distinctions, canons, cases, interpretations, and the like) still as the Civil Law is admired principally for its rules, so is the Common Law, as being resolvable into principles. The excellency of our Court of Chancery, as a Court of Equity, consists in its proceeding by principles, being the very essence of our Common Law; one of whose admirable maxims is, Quæ rerum naturâ prohibentur nulla Lege Confirmata sunt.

imply not only conditions and obligations, but subsisting capabilities and possibilities, could not allow their continuance contrary to the genius and spirit of present laws and an existing constitution, with powers capable of injuring and retarding its new arrangements, its own regular, authoritative movements. On such maxims it is, that on the principles of the English Constitution, the acts of one prince do not bind, notwithstanding the form of speech sometimes used, his successors, nor the acts of a preceding Legislature those which follow. This is policy essential to freedom. Without it bad laws could never be repealed; nor good laws, which opposed them, be enacted. An existing Government, then, I apprehend, does possess this legislative controul, this reserved stipulation and condition, this essential, paramount capacity of withdrawing, as well as bestowing, Privileges; a capacity like that in a certain machine, wherein the same power, which raises a weight, can let it down. Lord Mansfield, then, was not infallible.

With respect to Q. Elizabeth's Statutes—Lord Mansfield speaks of the University's accepting and receiving them—He says, “The validity of these Charters turns on the acceptance of the University. ‘When Q. Elizabeth gave these Statutes, the University,’ &c. “Nor could the University mean to accept them (the Statutes) on any other terms *,” which he had just mentioned.

Now the act of receiving implies something voluntary, a taking willingly, with a degree of pleasure or of satisfac-

It is a known maxim in our common law; Quando jus domini, et subditi concurrunt, jus regis præferri debet; nor less the following; Privilegium non valet contra Rempublicam.

Agreeable to these sound maxims of English law, are those positions of Aristotle's, being the true criterion of political justice, which is only morals, taken on its largest scale: Εἰ γὰρ καὶ ταῦτον ἴσῃ ἐνὶ καὶ πολλῇ, μείζον γὰρ καὶ τελειότερον τὸ τῆς πόλεως φαίνεται καὶ λαβεῖν καὶ σωζειν ἀγαπητόν μιν γὰρ καὶ ἐνὶ μόνῳ καλλίον διὰ καὶ θεϊότερον, ἐθνεὶ καὶ πόλεσιν· ἡ μὲν οὖν μέθοδος τούτων ἐφίεται, πολιτικὴ οὐσα. *Moral. tion; without that affection, the recipient would not be a free agent, the act of such receiving becoming the mere act of submitting. A brief examination of this matter may perhaps tend to place it in its true light.

Her Majesty gave her first charter to the University of Cambridge in 1559: between that time and the year, when she gave her large body of Statutes, which was in 1570, she honoured the University with a visit. This was in the year 1563; and on her departure, she addressed that learned body in a Latin speech. Therein she announced aliquod opus, which she meditated for their benefit—aliquod opus faciam, et quamdiu vita hos regat artus, nunquam a proposito deflectam—and, if she died before it was completed, still she said, aliquod egregium opus post mortem relinquam, quo et memoria mea in posterum fiat celebris, et alios excitem exemplo meo, et vos omnes alacriores faciam ad studia * vestra.

What our Church and University-Historian, Dr. Fuller, says, concerning this visit of Queen Elizabeth, reminds one of those ecclesiastical architects (it is well known that our old ecclesiastics and monks much studied architecture) who have sometimes so intermixed two orders in their churches, that they cannot be called one. So it fares with Dr. F.'s wit and management, with his complimenting, when combined with his candour and integrity. He says, "all were well pleased with this visit of the Queen." Yet by his reference to Sir Geo. Paul's Life of Archbishop Whitgift, p. 7, and by his own marginal note concerning "the first Cause of Mr. Cartwright's discontentment," he leads us to believe, that the latter was not well pleased; (Hist. of Camb. p. 139) and from the two following pages, that Cartwright was a very learned man†, the most popular

† Dr. F. possessed too much candour and learning, not to say, regard for his own reputation, to deny this. He calls Cartwright a great scholar, and admits, that he had the superiority over Whitgift in point of learning. As to preacher in the University, and “his followers” the most numerous party in it: and, if Cartwright and his followers were not well pleased, (and there is every reason to believe they were not) it appears to have been more about what concerned their consciences, than the favour or displeasure of her Majesty. Dr. F. adds, “that soon after this, Cartwright went beyond the seas, and after his travels returned a bitter enemy to the Hierarchy.” The fact, however, is, that his dislike commenced long before, even before Queen Elizabeth’s visit, and he did not go to Geneva till after his ejection from the Margaret-Professorship of Divinity*.

his learning, he was the person fixed upon by the most eminent men in the University as the best qualified to answer the Rheimish (Popish) Translation of the New Testament, published at that time: this he executed in one volume fol. 1584, with the names of the learned Cantabrigians prefixed, who prompted him to, and sanctioned, the work. It appears further, that Secretary Walsingham solicited him to undertake it, and it is thought, that Q. Elizabeth herself disbursed the money he sent him. Her Majesty had written to Beza to undertake the work, who recommended Cartwright as the fitter person for it, as the fittest person, too, in England, adding, that the “sun did not shine upon a more learned man.” Pierce’s Vindical. of Non-Conf. p. 101.

* Dr. Fuller, in another point, gives over-measure to Dr. Whitgift (then Archbishop of Canterbury), and to Dr. Cartwright, proportionably less than his due. The Puritans, (who in the judgment even of their opponents were the most learned of the clergy), printed Admonitions to the Parliament, containing a Recommendation of their Platform, and Censures on the Established religion. The Ecclesiastical Polity of Mr. Hooker, a man of rare abilities and learning, may be considered as an examination of those principles, and as a vindication of the established church. To the Admonitions Archbishop Whitgift (a person very inferior in talent to Hooker) wrote an Answer; and to this Answer Cartwright was fixed on to make a Reply, (though he had no share in the Admonitions themselves, as it has been said he had). His Grace afterwards wrote a Defence, and Dr. Fuller, it appears, gives many conjectures on the reasons of Dr. Cartwright’s silence, as though he could not, or durst not, answer it; when the fact is, Dr. Cartwright did answer it in two volumes, one printed in 1575, the other in 1577; and, which is more extraordinary, in the preceding page (Hist. Presbyter. p. 237, as quoted by Mr. James Pierce, (for I have not perused

But to trace this matter a little further back. When Elizabeth succeeded to the crown, eleven Popish Masters of Colleges were removed by her, to make room for an equal number of Protestant. There had been a similar removal (for the number was exactly the same) of Protestant Masters, to make room for Popish, on the accession of Queen Mary * ; and in the University there were still some who kept snug, conformists to the church established, though secretly attached to Popery, such as had been Protestants under Edward, Papists under Mary, and now Protestants again under the reigning queen †. Such men, at least but half Protestants, might, probably, be well pleased with their prospects of preferment ‡, who yet could not be much the work), Dr. Fuller himself quotes Cartwright's last Answer. But the Archbishop took the most effectual method of answering all Dr. Cartwright's works at once, and silencing him, by throwing him into the Fleet Prison.

Neither these remarks, nor those in the text, are intended as a defence either of the Presbyterian or Episcopalian Platform, nor of the Rheimish Translation of the New Testament, nor yet as a censure of either. My business lies in another direction : and all intended is, to throw a few grains of truth into that scale, in which Dr. Fuller has not given full weight. As to persecution, it was the order of the day in these times : whichever party gained the ascendancy, whether Popish, Prelatical, or Presbyterian (and each got ascendancy in its turn), its regular course was to call in the civil magistrate and to proceed to persecution : (it seems, indeed, to have been almost a necessary consequence of admitting the opinion, that the civil magistrate should interfere with religion at all ; the opinion must be taken with all its consequences) and if both Papists and Episcopalians were severe persecutors of each other and of the Presbyterians (and it is sadly true they were so), it will be recollected that the Presbyterians took their turn, persecuting both Papists and Episcopalians, when they got into power.

† Some of her ministers were of the same character, as one states who well knew. Sir Robert Naunton's Fragmenta Regalia, p. 12.

‡ This visit of Elizabeth to Cambridge reminds me of that farce that was pleased with the new regulations, a compliance with which, (agreeably to a hint thrown out in the Proœmium of Eliza-

acted in the former reign before her Sister, though Philip and Mary, and Cardinal Pole, were probably sincere enough in their part, whatever may be said of some other performers. The King, and Queen, and the Two Estates of Parliament, were electrified with joy, on Cardinal Pole's appearing before them, after his restoration, in the insignia of his Legantine character, to resettle the Pope's supremacy, and to give a general absolution for all past disobedience. Ludovico Beccatelli says of this interview—"The King and Queen, and the Estates of Parliament, assembled on the day appointed, and the Legate was introduced with full pomp, attended with all the ensigns of his high character, &c. The whole assembly unanimously declared" (what had they not declared in Edward's reign?) "they would never swerve from their obedience, and asking pardon three several times for their former transgressions, begged his reconciled benedictions, which the Legate pronounced before them all, the King and Queen standing, and the whole House upon their knees, weeping tears of joy for so marvellous a blessing." Life of Cardinal Pole. But, says one of Beccatelli's annotators, the French Ambassador, who was present, saw the inward discontent that sat brooding over the hearts of many that were among them: "L'occasion de sa venue ameyne quelque regret a plusieurs." And he imputes their apparent satisfaction to the great cunning and subtlety of Gardiner's ministry, and the dexterous management of the Imperial Dollars.

Pole himself was probably very sincere, when he, in reference to himself and her husband, ventured to address her Majesty thus—V. Mæsta ha da ringratiar grandemente, perche la giunta insieme le due maggior potesta del mondo; cioe quella della Mæsta della imperatore, rappresentata nella Mæsta del Re, et quella della Santita del Papa, rappresentata nella Persona mia. But Bishop Gardiner—What must be said of that ecclesiastical fox?—He had been Chancellor of the University of Cambridge in a Protestant and in a Popish reign; had laboured to render Cardinal Pole (a far more humane and honest man than himself), while abroad, unpopular and obnoxious in England; and, in opposition to him, had written against the Pope's supremacy; yet, in the above interview—oh! what a mystery, and riddle is a politician's creed!—he made a pompous oration, wherein "he returns thanks to God's providence, which had preserved this angelic minister for their sakes, who came to lead them out of darkness into light through this their present Act of Obedience" (comprehending submission to the Pope's supremacy) "to the Apostolic See, which their ancestors had always acknowledged." Archbishop Tillotson well observes, "Hypocritical piety is double iniquity."

One is reminded, by such conversions, of the sudden, glorious conver-beth's Statutes*, well understood) became the conditions of them. For convictions and conversions are not to be suddenly made, except as harlequins turn quickly round in masquerade; in which character it must be confessed some acted their parts well, while Elizabeth assisted in shifting the scenes, by her fondness for Popish ceremonies. But conviction implies the exercise of reason, the approbation and sanction of conscience. And it is inconsistent with the order and progress of mind, incongruous with the process of moral principle, impossible in the very nature of things, that rational changes should take place in rational beings, with the same promptness, the same instinctive transitions, with which certain snakes, in putting off their skins, assume a different nature, and delight in different food; or with which caterpillars undergo the different transmutations in their progress to their most perfect state. The mechanism of the human mind is formed on very different principles; it proceeds by very different laws; and by powerful associations, by refined combinations, arrives at its conclusions on what is just and right.

This was well known to the Queen. She understood, thoroughly understood, while some persons were of more complying consciences, like the willow, easily to be bent, that others, with whom she had to do, were of materials more stubborn and unyielding; who, like the oak, could not be bent, though they might be bruised. She knew there were such men at Cambridge: it was in reference to them she speaks in the above-mentioned preface; Rursus crescente hominum audaciâ, nimiaq. Licentiâ, aliquas novas prioribus esse duximus adjiciendas. Negotia enim quæ de novo emergerunt, novo indigere auxilio facile cernimus; alluding, I apprehend, to what had passed between her giving her first statutes in 1559, and those given 1570.

sions of whole nations to Christianity by the accidental baptism, which might be merely political, of some reigning prince.

Whether then the University were well pleased with the Queen's visit, or no, and to whatever extent, the presumption would be, on the first glance, that they could not be much, and generally, pleased with her statutes. And, on a closer inspection, we shall, for certain, perceive they were not so. For, though it is supposed that some heads of Houses, assisted in the compilation and composition of the new Statutes, How was it, if the University were well pleased with this Egregium Opus of her Majesty's, that they could not be prevailed on, though solicited, to present her with an address of thanks,—the usual formality with that learned body, particularly where they have reason to be well-pleased? How was it that, on the contrary, there were open reasonings, secret murmurings, and direct petitioning against sundry particulars in them? In the Library of MSS. in Beue't College Library, there is a Petition* of 169 members of the Senate, Regent, and Non-Regent, against many articles contained in these Statutes; but they were obliged to take them all, for better or worse. Could they, under such circumstances then, be justly said to accept or receive these statutes? Were they not rather forced to take them? "Mandatum necessitatem facit," said the Queen.

True it is, where opposition is fruitless, complaining will gradually die away. Law has a constraining force, and custom reconciles us to inconveniencies. And, as in the present case, some of the more scrupulous and querulous would move off, less fuel being thus left to feed the spirit of discontent, there would be less heat among those who remained: there would be something more of unanimity, perhaps, on considering the existing state of things, more of conviction. Besides, we are naturally inclined to be pleased with the discipline in which we have been educated, and to approve institutions under which we derive advantages. Hence it is, that an accommodation (and Elizabeth's new regulations possessed much that was of a very mixed, ambiguous nature) will pass for reformation; expediency for reason; and passion for principle. What was passed amidst tumultuary movements, bringing opposite forces into action—like Montesquieu's famous division of three opposite political powers, to effect the balance of the English Constitution—is lost sight of under present quiet and feelings of enjoyment. We are, therefore, not to wonder—for, as through all the affairs of human life, so of political institutions, there is a natural order in events, binding as the laws of necessity—we are not to wonder, on finding among the Senatus Consulta sive Gratiae, a Grace, May 3d, 1603, for the Commemoration of Queen Elizabeth (on occasion of her death) “for the innumerable and unspeakable benefits which she had conferred on the body of the University*.” In contemplating her talents, learning, and success in abolishing Popery, and the great energy both of her civil and ecclesiastical administration, they would not be at leisure to remember their complainants, nor the body of sufferers; and, on having fresh in their memories the confirmation of charters, the enlargement of privileges, the liberal manner in which she certainly fostered and rewarded literature, they would too easily overlook, and indeed they were now taught to be reconciled to, the encroachments which she had undoubtedly made on their civil and religious liberties. When we are gratified with our present situation, we are not apt to disturb ourselves with rigid calculations; and whatever our feelings may be, gratitude is the Aaron's rod, which swallows up all the rest.

* I have not actually perused this Petition, though I have had the curiosity to make a search for it; nor have I been able to find it in Mr. Nasmyth's Catalogue of the MSS. of C. C. C. So small a piece as a Petition may easily lie buried in a volume, and not have been taken into the list of Mr. Nasmyth's Titles of MSS. ; or I may have overlooked it: but there can be no doubt of its being in this Library, it being referred to in that well-known controversy on the subject of appeals, maintained in 1751 and 1752, among the learned members of the University, who would never have referred to a paper, which had no existence, which they had not seen, and in a place where they might have been so readily contradicted, had they been mistaken.

There is one remarkable passage in this Grace: "wherein we shall not only perform our duties, but also give occasion to her successors, for our mindfulness of her Majesty, to esteem the better of us:" and the very same year, Jan. 9th, it is supposed, was passed the famous Grace de oppugnantoribus Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ; though, in fact, it never was passed*.

This impassioned embalming of the memory of Elizabeth had too complimentary a view on James I.; he read it right, and he began his reign with imposing a new test of obedience; which new and much stronger test of obedience was followed by his order † for subscriptions. But, though the doctrine of divine right and passive obedience, broached in his reign, gave a mystical charm to the royal proceedings, yet not unfrequently it happens, that men flatter princes, while not convinced by their measures, more plausibly allured, and more outwardly gratified, with what may be profusely given, than inwardly pleased, or conscientiously satisfied, in receiving it. Such was often the case in these times‡; and, in * Though this Grace is in the printed Book of Statutes, it was only copied from the Vice-Chancellor's Book, and is not to be found in the University Grace-Book, where only it could have official, legal existence. Consequently, though some may presume that such a Grace was passed, there exists no proof; and, therefore, whatever may be said of Queen Elizabeth's Statute de Concionibus (cap. 45), that Grace must be considered not merely as one of the many obsolete Graces, but as a nullity. See Mr. Friend's Trial.

‡ It was in reference to a person of this character, one of puritanic principles, who accepted a Bishopric in James the First's reign, that the following lines were written:

Et medicum accersi sedulo quisq. jubet:

the present instance, the law just alluded to plainly indicates, there was a strong tendency to discontent ; and the perturbed, diseased state of the body appeared from the swarms of sectaries, which began to spring up in this reign, and which continued to rise in greater numbers, and with a more sensible, busy noise, for several years afterwards.

James I., though no friend to military tactics, was much attached to ecclesiastical. In addition to Elizabeth's Statutes, and his own three "darling articles," he must needs surround the University with his canons and ecclesiastical jurisdiction; though, it must be confessed, "only so far forth as they concerned divine service:" for his Majesty himself maintained, "it was held, that the spiritual jurisdiction of the University of Cambridge, and of all the students and members of the Colleges there, belonged to the Chancellor, and the subordinate ministers of the University, or the students and members thereof, as they are collegiates; except in case of special visitation; which privilege of the University he was not willing to have infringed." His Majesty's words run thus: "First, we do command, that all the ecclesiastical laws, canons, and constitutions of this our Church of England, so far forth as they concern divine service, be duly observed in all and every the Colleges, without immutation, upon any pretence of local statutes whatever*."

Towards the members of the University the language and temper of James were those of high authority†; towards the town, while complimenting the learned body, somewhat contemptuous; and he would not allow it to be a city *.

The case of many who complied, as well as of many who receded, were alike so many testimonies against certain particulars both in the Statutes, and in his Orders and Injunctions.

Charles I. by his Injunctions, May 4th, 1629, ordered “that all those directions and orders of his father, which at any time were sent to the said University, should be duly observed and put in execution;” among which were some, which would remind his Majesty of certain advice given by James to his son Henry, when in Scotland, directing his conduct to a large body of men, some of whom had made a considerable figure in the literary world:—“Do not suffer them,” said he, “if you resolve to live in peace, to enjoy the same country with yourself, unless, mayhap, for trying your patience, as Socrates lived with Xantippe †.”

With respect to those members of the Universities who continued obedient to his and his father’s Injunctions, he was sufficiently gracious ‡; and in matters which kept the town in its accustomed subjection to them by his confirmation of their most ample privileges, liberal enough towards them; though how far consistently with the nature of commerce and the liberties of the town, is another matter. The case, however, alluded to, refers rather to their charters, than their statutes.

In this prince’s reign there continued to spread the spirit of discontent and strife, about doctrines, particularly with those who afterwards fell in with the views of the Parliament. This discontent and strife the statutes of Elizabeth, the articles of James, and the measures adopted by Charles, were ill-qualified to allay. Towards Oxford the King authorized a visitation, by Archbishop Laud, a person little acquainted with the healing art, incompetent to bringing learned men into union on the noble principles of civil and religious liberty. This visitation appears to have been engaged in by agreement between the Archbishop and the King, without the advice of his Lords in Council *; a circumstance scarcely worth noticing, of Charles, who governed the nation at large without once taking the advice of his Parliament, and even, as we have already seen, without calling one, for many years.

During the Commonwealth, a plan was in contemplation for the reformation of the Universities: and for reformation there was abundant room. It does not appear from the Solemn League and Covenant, nor from Mr. Prynne's famous Speech in the House of Commons, already referred to, (the best authorities on this subject) that the Presbyterians were hostile to a King, while ruling with a Parliament, nor averse to kingly government, properly limited; but that they were totally unacquainted with the principles of religious freedom: it does not appear, that they wished to disperse the property of the University, but only to appropriate it to their own party: it does not appear, that they aimed to annul Charters, Privileges, or Statutes; but merely to jostle out the party * unfavourable to their plan, and to hedge in their Discipline, Directory, and Doctrines, to fill up the gap—All, Vanity of vanities, and Vexation of spirit! Little benefit is obtained in altering a form, while the principle is bad—The schemes of the Papists, of the Episcopalians, of the Presbyterians, were each alike inconsistent with the nature of a lay-corporation, hostile to the claims of literature, and destructive to religious liberty—Non tali auxilio—Rotten buttresses can prop only weak edifices, and give no support to such as are strong.

* Dr. Johnston ("The King's Visitatorial Power asserted," &c. p. 252), who so strongly supported the arbitrary measures of James II. against the Master and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, on the subject of Laud's visitation, speaks of the "King's Order in Council;" but there is no mention of the King's Council in the Archbishop's Petition to the King; and the King's Answer, dated Hampton Court, 22 May, 1630, runs thus—"His Majesty is graciously pleased to grant this Petition, and to hear all parties upon Tuesday the 14th June, when all parties are to attend with their Council, or otherwise, as they please."

One and all then in these times, had reason to complain of some existing statutes and orders, or of such as it was intended to be put in force. They all stood in the way of “unity of Spirit, in a bond of peace”—“Do men gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles?”

Without scrutinizing into the views of certain pretenders, and their predominant peculiar errors, certain it is, there were among them many who were friends to literature, and

* As is clear from the Querela Cantabrigiensis, (p. 19 to the end) though this is rather an enraged account of the process in ejecting the Royalists from Cambridge-University, than a statement of the rules for the admission of the Parliamentarians. Wood's Hist. et Antiq. Oxon. Lib. 1. from p. 369 to p. 414, contains a minute account of both. The first article in the Solemn League and Covenant, to be sworn to by members of the University, even the scholars, reads thus—Conabimur insuper Ecclesias Dei in tribus his Regni ad Arcitissimam (quam fieri potest) in Religione, Fidei Confessione, Regiminis Ecclesiastici Formâ, Directorio Cultus et Catechismi, Consentionem et Uniformitatem adducere, &c. Whoever has read this Confessio, &c. will see that the Covenant left no room for a grain of liberty. The Chancellor (the Earl of Pembroke) took the following oath:—“Fidem tuam astringes ad observanda Statuta, Libertates, Privilegia, et Consuetudines hujus Universitatis, rite stabilita, ita tamen, ut auctoritati et Potestati Parliamentariæ subjaceant; atq. id præstabis quoad ex munere et officio ad quod admissus es evocabere.” And it is clear, from the ambiguous manner in which the public orator speaks of the University-Statutes, and of the Divine Statutes, (presenting him, at the same time, with a New Testament in English) that they had it in contemplation to reform the Statutes, according to their exposition of the New Testament, i. e. according to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of Geneva.

DISSERTATION.

well affected to the true interests of civil society. But as disease retards the genuine functions and affections of the natural body, so will intellectual and moral depravity those of the political; and, as in the former the soundness of the constitution is the best security against some maladies, so are principles well ascertained, rightly, producibly organized, and fairly directed to the happiness of the latter, the true, the only security against a corruption as well of the body at large, as of detached members of it. All plans, short of this, short of equal liberty and impartial justice, having, like chance, no final cause, are exposed to every wind. It was in part, through a misconception of facts, and not applying the experience of former times to the existing circumstances, through not ascertaining the sound permanent maxims of political science, and not combining them into a scheme for public good; but most of all, it was through the ambition, covetousness, and hypocrisy of mere pretenders to reform, as Milton*, who was so well acquainted with the men of that period, honestly confesses, that the hopes and expectations of many good men failed†.

* For worldly-mindedness, under the mask of piety, as it is the most insidious, so is it often the most pernicious, of all the workers of iniquity.

† While describing very forcibly the practices of those "who had no mean sway both in Church and State," and admitting there were among them some men of wisdom and integrity, he observes, "the rest, (to be sure the greater part) were men whom wealth or ample possessions, or bold and active ambition, rather than merit, had commended to the same place, a seat in the parliament."

Of the Clergy, he remarks, "These conscientious men, ere any part of the work was done, for which they came together, and that on the public salary, wanted not boldness, (to the ignominy and scandal of their pastorlike office, and especially of their boasted reformation) to seize into their hands, or not unwillingly to accept (besides one, sometimes two, or more, of the best livings) collegiate masterships in the Universities, and rich lectures in the city, setting sail to all winds that might blow gain into their covetous bosoms.—And again, "while they taught compulsion without conviction, which not long before they complained of as executed unchristianly against themselves; these intents are clear to have been no

Whatever there may have been in the Orders of Oliver Cromwell, they were all, by a Grace, April 27, 1661, blotted out of the University Records; but the Graces passed between 1642 and 1652, inclusive, were suffered to stand; and, with the exception of one (which it seems has never been acted on), they appear to be unexceptionable: those which tend to suppress needless expenses, on taking degrees, to set aside obsolete statutes, and to prevent or blot out the guilt of perjury, are entitled to particular respect. They may serve, too, as a testimony against the nature and tendency of some of Elizabeth's Statutes.

Charles the IInd then was restored, but broke faith with his subjects by violating the Treaty at Breda, as effectually as Louis had with the French Protestants, by the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz. But to pass this—he chose to keep things in the same order at Cambridge-University, in which Elizabeth and James left them. The Act of Uniformity operated on our Universities, as well as on the Church, by ejecting several Masters and Fellows of Colleges*. This Act may therefore be considered as a Declaratory Act, explaining, by enforcing, the sense of certain better than antichristian; setting up a spiritual tyranny by a secular power, to the advancing their own authority over the magistrate, whom they would have made their executioner, to punish church-delinquencies, whereof civil laws have no cognizance."——

—"Thus they, who of late were extolled as our greatest deliverers, and had the people wholly at their devotion, by so discharging their trusts, as we see, did not only weaken and unfit themselves to be dispensers of what liberty they pretended, but unfitted also the people, now grown worse, and more disordinate, to receive or digest any liberty at all." Introduct. to the 3rd Book of his Hist. of Britain. It will be found in the edit. of his Works, 2 vol. fol. 1738, and the subsequent edit. in 4to, but could not, for obvious reasons, be inserted in the former editions. It will be also found in Mr. Baron Maseres's edition of Milton's History, published separately, in 1818.

Statutes, and Senatus-Consulta, given by the reigning powers, and so considered by those who suffered under them. Hence the Dissenting Interest, those various classes of sectaries, as they are called, who were thenceforth to be considered not as disaffected and suspected regiments, within the garrison, but as hostile companies without; who, if they have not always violently opposed, have never heartily approved; and if not frequently attacking the citadel, have been often found assailing the outworks.

It appears, then, that the arrangements of our academical discipline and regimen, from its commencement under Elizabeth to the last Orders of Charles II. at which period this our Book of Privileges closes, have never been so perfect, as to require no correction, nor so liberal, as to silence all complaint. On the contrary, there has been left in them much room for both. They have resembled houses in danger of falling into ruins, which frequently want repairs; or bodies standing in need of the medical skill of very heterogeneous practitioners, by their tendency to some accidental or constitutional, indescribable disease. Hence frivolous controversies, violent commotions, hostile divisions, and painful separations; while these altercations, having terminated, at length, in the ascendancy of one party, were followed by obsequiousness towards the authority, which oppressed the other. Hence flattery, which while it deteriorated genius, gave confidence to arbitrary power*.

James II. if he did not annul statutes, over-ruled them; if he did not absolutely sport with the oaths of the members of Magdalen College, he claimed the privilege of dispensing with them,—in asserting deference to his own power, while claiming a right to expel them, if refractory; and of giving absolution to them, if, in obeying his orders, they violated their oaths. One of his ecclesiastical Commissioners *, it must be acknowledged, managed part of the dispute with plausibility, urging, that while the members pleaded Conscience against a Royal Dispensation for violating some statutes, which favoured their interests, they gave themselves a dispensation for others, less favourable to their inclinations; a charge, which, though in the first instance brought only against a particular College, might have been extended to the statutes of the University, its members at large, and the Bishop among the rest; for, at the time, many of those statutes had become obsolete, and of no effect. Taking laws for obsolete, implies a present rejection of them; an habitual disobedience to such as are still in force, no cordial approbation.

At the Revolution in 1688 the defects in our Universities did not escape notice: the principles on which the new establishment was founded, naturally inclined to a reformation, and ought to have effected one: but the evils, with many others, which concerned the state, were left without remedy. Our Mater Alma Universitas, in a rational point of view, is possessed of vast capabilities, and claims the most serious attention of every upright statesman. She is the fœcunda propagatrix studentium: from that tree of knowledge, whether of good or evil, planted by her, the fruits are conveyed into every department of Church and State; and shoots from it transplanted into every part of the island, present their leaves even to the most secret and remote corners. But—"the leaves of that tree,—have they been for the healing of the nation?"

It is said, that Mr. Locke had an interview with K. William on this subject, at the beginning of his reign; and that after observing to his Majesty, he had made "a most glorious and happy Revolution," he added, "that it would all soon go back, if no reformation was made of our Universities;" on which the King confessed, that "there was something in what Mr. Locke said." But a certain Peer, it seems, suggested, that "Mr. Locke was a mere scholar," not, I suppose, a man of the world. And, it is true, he was not: but he was an honest, independent man; he understood the nature of the mind; the instincts, inclinations, and passions of man; the laws of education; and the principles of civil and religious liberty. Such a man was Locke. Such men, and such men only, are qualified to reform States and Universities; and had there been at this time wisdom and principle enough to employ such a person, with other enlightened and upright Commissioners, the mind that conceived the Essay on the Human Understanding, the Letters on Toleration, and the Treatises on Government, would undoubtedly have suggested a plan, not very consonant, indeed, with our present system of restrictions and exclusions, but more favourable to genius and intellect, to virtue, and true religion. It would have breathed more of the spirit of peace and benevolence; and by losing sight of the little views of ecclesiastical time-servers and state-empirics, might have been worthy of the British nation.

This division, then, of the present Dissertation*, though it set out somewhat hypothetically and cautiously, might have been expressed more generally, and with a tone of greater decision. For the facts stated here, under this second head, may be received as distinct proofs, shewing, that, as our Universities were not originally formed of the best materials, nor established in the most auspicious times, nor confirmed under the most favourable circumstances, they required much subsequent reformation. We are, however, now speaking of the regimen, and economy of the place, not of its literature.

And as the facts so deduced from the commencement of our academical establishment to the Revolution must demonstrate that it possessed some original disease, so would the testimonies, which could be produced from that period to the present, that as yet no remedy has been applied. But, for the present, we defer testimonies: for, by the crowding of our pages we should lose sight of our immediate design, which was, to bring this matter within its true point of sight, by contemplating the active exercise of the proper authorities, on the supposition that a reformation should ever be required in our Universities. Whether, when, or by the course of what events, a reformation may be ever promoted, cannot fall within the view of the present times, and as I do not profess to foresee them, so shall I not presume to inquire into them: but that a reformation is required, the preceding facts amply shew, and the testimonies hereafter to be produced will more abundantly confirm.

II. In a machine, which is curious and complicate, though it may not be constructed on the most liberal and best-contrived principles, we may expect to find much of order and proportionate arrangement; and in an institution, where the formation of the human character in the most critical period of life is a leading object, we may look for many wise regulations to preserve good morals; where the interest and honour of the clergy have been much consulted, we may expect, that a sufficient respect has been shewn to the exterior forms of religion, and, where it has been necessary to preserve the due equilibrium of authority and subordination, to meet with a display of much œconomical wisdom: hence many prudent restraints, many wholesome correctives, much liberal encouragement, and many salutary laws. Regularity is the machinery which keeps the whole in due exercise, and the statutes are the hinges on which it turns.

Accordingly, each particular college is here provided with its peculiar laws or statutes, given by its original Founder, or by some visitor, appointed by him, for the purposes of discipline, for the encouragement of good morals, and the correction of immoralities. Here, to each officer is assigned his proper duties : in some cases of discipline or reformation, the Master acts alone ; in some the Master and Dean conjointly ; in others the agreement of the Master and a majority of the Fellows is required. Several of the old statutes, by the consent of the Society (and some colleges by the statutes themselves possess this authority) pass sub silentio ; others become obsolete, though never formally repealed ; and being virtually abolished, by a new order of things, they die naturally away. Thus the statutes made in popish times, without any repeal, have no force nor obligation now, by each member's taking a new oath of supremacy, and by the use of the Protestant Liturgy established by law.—Then there follows the Visitor ; and he possesses very great authority : for to a certain extent, he can give new statutes : to him as a virtual judge are submitted, in the way of appeals, all matters of a doubtful nature, or in which any power has been strained beyond its proper bounds, or in which any undue severity of punishment is supposed to have been exercised, or which, in the interpretation of the College Statutes, admits of litigation : and the decree of the Visitor has been pretty generally considered final ; so that even on a rehearing in a civil law-court, (as sometimes has taken place) the decisions have turned with a deference reserved for his authority. Yet, after all, the sphere of the Visitor is limited as to the objects which it can embrace. For the purpose of any essential reformation an ampler sphere is required ; and in this the supreme Visitor's authority alone (for hitherto I have been speaking only of the local Visitor) can act—that must give the original motion, and direct all its course. In the form, in which James II. acted towards Magdalen College, though in an unconstitutional spirit, we may, in some sort, contemplate the principles and authority by which Harry VIII. Edward VI. Mary, and Elizabeth, severally acted in their reformatations; that is to say, by the introduction of a new state of things, which virtually and immediately set aside the old; or by Commissioners, exercising the office of supreme visitators, delegated to them by the proper constitutional authority.

Colleges may be said to be Universities in miniature; and Universities admit of remarks similar to those on Colleges. The former, in like manner as the latter, have their established laws, their acknowledged duties, in reference to members, according to their proper rank, or some specific appointment and designation to office. The Chancellor, and Vice-Chancellor, with the Proctors, Taxers, and Scrutators, the High-Steward, the Caput, and Senate, comprehending the Regents and Non-Regents, and the like, each hath his appropriate place in the regimen and œconomy of the University. Here then, for the purposes of active reformation, there seems an assemblage of power; and there certainly is. Here that power appears to be great; and it undoubtedly is great: for by it not only is the ordinary discipline of the place maintained, literary pursuits are encouraged, public degrees conferred, smaller neglects and offences punished;—but the Vice-Chancellor, as we have seen, holds his regular Court of Law, where criminal causes are tried between party and party, and the Chancellor, with the consent of the whole University, can make new Statutes. Here the work of reformation is seen in the ordinary discipline of the place, moving visibly according to prescribed limits. All the points alluded to here, are distinctly and fully described in the body of Statutes now before the reader, and to dwell on particulars would be both tedious and superfluous. But I beg leave to bring before the reader once again the following Royal Statute: Cancellario cum consensu totius Academiæ licebit Nova Statuta ad eruditionis amplificationem et decori et honesti conservationem, inter Scholasticos haben- dam, sancire ; sic ut ea his decretis nostris nihil detrahant aut officiant. Stat. Eliz. Cap. 42, ad finem.

Now though, on first view, the power here permitted and acknowledged seems considerable, yet, on closer inspection, it will be found, and from actual experience it has been found, that it leaves no capacity for any enlarged improvements, any liberal amelioration and reformation ; and though it may be sufficient for the current wants of the day, and the occasional duties of the place, yet we see that it is allowed with a most significant and important reservation ; that it extends only to what is called in the schools, accidents, not to substance or essence, leaving no room for the exercise of any great principles, which, where things widely deviate from philosophy, are the fundamentals for true reformation. This capacity resides with the primary Visitor alone. The ordinary governing powers, when seen in actual exercise, are but the secondary wheels of a great machine, deriving all the strength which they possess from the primary force, and which can only act to a certain extent. To produce any new unusual effect, the first great power of the machine must set off with new force, and give to the machine a direction entirely new.

Now the authority of the primary visitor has been discussed much at large : it has been seen, that, according to the principles both of the common and civil law, as well as ecclesiastical, it resides in the supreme power, administered by the prince or princess for the time being : but, an English king not being one qui regaliter regnat, by his sole personal character, (on the principle which the Greeks call παμβασιλεια)* but in his political, with a parliament,—it may be more properly said to reside with the king, cum parlamento suo† : and this idea was so familiar to our most arbitrary princes (I mean the Tudor and Stuart race) that for what they framed, too much frequently according to their own personal discretion, or the strictly monarchical character, they took care often to obtain the constitutional gloss of an Act of Parliament. Some of our lawyers have had no opinion, or rather a very bad one, of Queen Elizabeth's statutes; but those who think they were not properly ratified, or at furthest, as one expresses it, only confirmed in the gross, such must allow, that had they been regularly and completely ratified by Parliament, they would have been strictly constitutional and binding. But to act first, and make the law afterwards, was certainly a crablike movement in politics. It was placing the posse of the thing before the esse: whereas the reformation of corporate bodies, proceeding by a certain rule, should in some sort be seen, before it is felt. It begins at a settled, visible, acknowledged point, and then only proceeds in a right, regular, constitutional course.

Sentiments similar to these weighed seriously, (and it should seem justly) with many conscientious clergymen, who scrupled to read James the Second's Declaration in their churches. It was urged by the king's party, that the principles contained in the Declaration were intended to be formed into an act of parliament; and that what the king graciously thus proposed to effect, it was the duty of the clergy to read. And thus far seems true, that—the church of England being a parliamentary church—the clergy ought to obey the parliamentary decisions; or, if they cannot conscientiously obey, conscientiously to retire. But here arose the question on the other side—How can we read that as a parliamentary church, which the parliament has not yet decided*? This was putting the question wisely, and in its proper place; and here, if the clergy who refused to read the Declaration, acted concientiously, they also acted constitutionally.

* "It is to teach," said a conscientious clergyman, "the dispensing power, which alters what has been formerly thought the whole Constitu-

But, how did the active powers of the supreme Visitor move with respect to reformation, at the Revolution in 1688? and where, according to the principles of the Revolution, does it now reside?

The active powers of the supreme Visitor were not seen to move at all at the Revolution: so far as simple toleration went, the Prince of Orange had consented, that the Papists in England, Scotland, and Ireland, should be suffered to continue in their religion with as much liberty as was allowed them by the States of these provinces, (the United States) "in which it cannot (I am quoting the words in a Letter understood to proceed from the Prince of Orange) be denied they enjoyed a full liberty of conscience; and, as for the Dissenters, their Majesties did not only consent, but did heartily approve of their having an entire liberty, for the full exercise of their religion, without any trouble or hinderance; so that none might be able to give them the least disturbance on that account." They further agreed, if K. James should require it, "to the repealing of all penal laws, provided that those laws remained still in full vigour, by which the Roman Catholics were shut out of both Houses of Parliament, and out of all employments ecclesiastical, civil, and military, these being, as it was urged, necessary for the security of the Protestant religion; and that by them the Roman Catholics received no other prejudice than the being excluded from parliaments and other public employments; and that their highnesses also believed that the Dissenters (towards whom the same provisions were to be made) would be fully satisfied when they should be for ever covered from all danger of being disturbed or punished for the free exercise of their religion, upon any sort of pretence whatsoever."

These were the sentiments of the Prince of Orange, expressed before he was called to the crown of England, in a Letter written by Myn Heer Fagel, Pensioner of Holland, May 2, 1688; and on these principles the Revolution turned and was settled.

Now we have already seen, that the employments in our Universities are of a civil nature; and it of course follows, that Catholics, and Dissenters, as such, are, according to the condition, in which matters were left at the Revolution, excluded from them. So far then as conscience was concerned, it afforded considerable relief, by the repeal of certain penal laws; still it was thought that too many things were left as matters of privilege; that the Revolution, therefore, in 1688 was a very partial reformation; and that the Catholics and Dissenters had still reason to complain of many civil deprivations; and, among others, of being debarred of the advantages to be enjoyed from studying in our Universities.

Where then—to return to the other question—where, on the principles of the Revolution, do the acting powers of the supreme visitatorial authority over our Universities for any purpose of reformation now reside? Precisely where they did. We have had occasion to notice Mr. Locke's testimony to King William, "that if his Majesty did not reform the Universities, things would go back again:" and, also, that in the Declaration of Rights no notice is taken of Universities, except in those more general terms, which relate to all Corporations; the import of which was, that there was no intention, notwithstanding any new face of things, to interrupt the liberties and privileges of corporations, nor to deprive them of their property and possessions. There had been an act similar in principle passed in Mary's reign: this was in consequence of a petition to the Queen, that notwithstanding the Popish succession, all church-lands disposed of to laymen should be settled on their possessors for ever; which act was confirmed in full Parliament, by the Queen, (Cardinal Pole acting, too, as Legate a Latere from the Pope) by the Clergy, by the Lords and Commons. This act secured the manors, lands, tenements, &c. of all Colleges, Hospitals, all Bodies Politic or Corporate, &c.*. But how far was this act supposed to extend? Was it proposed by it to take away from the proper authorities the right of supreme visitation? Was it designed to prevent such reformati<sup>o</sup>ns at any future period, in Colleges and Universities, as according to the rules of such visitations, and the public state of things, at the time, might be deemed expedient? Far from it: so far from it, that we find there was an active visitation made at the beginning of Mary's reign; that a reformation was entered on, agreeably to the national establishment at that period; and that a new Body of Statutes was actually prepared for the Universities.

The political measures of the Revolution affected no great principle of the English Constitution; the Bill of Rights being in fact only a declaratory act: it reformed some public abuses, and promoted some public improvements; but it made no alteration in the common, civil, or ecclesiastical law: and, though it secured the privileges and properties of corporations, it took no prerogative from the crown. The supreme visitatorial authority, therefore, over Universities, as over all other corporations, for all the authorized purposes of correcting abuses, and of lawful reformation, was, punctum stans, immoveable and fixed. This could not have been altered, had King William even wished it. Had he said, "Gentlemen, I leave the vessel entirely to your guidance; you have all your property on board guaranteed by me; you may sail in your own strength and confidence to whatever coasts you please, and to those ports where it is not your pleasure it should enter, it shall never come. We not only secure to you all your property, but, though we also have a cargo, a great interest on board, we forego every claim; we resign every right to you: we give all the profits, and every expectation, every right of inquiry and investigation, though handed down to us from time immemorial, we surrender every thing to you, your heirs and successors, being of the same religion with you, for ever; and expect no responsibility from you either to my government or me."

It will easily be believed, that neither King William nor any Vir bonus, or minister for him, could ever make such a speech; and for this obvious reason—such words would have been nugatory.

But suppose he had: imagine, further, that he had even subjoined—"Gentlemen, I insure all this to you not only in my own name, but in behalf of all the successors to the crown of England; and the Parliament secures it to you not only for itself, but in the place and on the behalf of all future parliaments." To what would this have amounted? It would have been only plunging deeper in the mire, with fewer means for extricating themselves; only adding a few more words, with a little less meaning; only giving a more ample promise, with less opportunities, and reasons, every day decreasing, for the fulfilment of them: for it is obvious, that no prince, by his promises, can bind his successors; and that no existing parliament can give laws, that are binding on future parliaments.

But, not to multiply words unnecessarily, we may perhaps be allowed to catch something of the spirit of the Revolution in 1688, and to strengthen our language by it. For it may be said to have elucidated some principles, and to have declared them more fully: just as a blazing torch may pass hastily through the avenues of an ancient building, and spread about light, without sufficiently exploring some secret chambers, and not without even terror and apprehensions of the conductors, so the Revolution afforded some truths, and conferred some benefits : it exposed certain futile pretensions ; it restored to a certain extent civil liberty ; and confirmed our constitutional principles. But though it was a good step, it stopped too soon. With respect to Universities, it may be said " to have left the Minster as it found it." For that event did not reach them : if it made any new discoveries, it effected no real advantages. Still, enabling us, as it did, to see more fully the proper boundaries of the Constitution, and the privileges belonging to each part, it authorizes us to speak on them more incontrovertibly ; and, also, in conformity to them, to say less ambiguously, that, agreeably to its maxims, then declared, and settled, this right of supreme visitation over our Universities, (to which point only this Dissertation tends) for the purpose of giving new regulations, any essential reformation, and for accommodating it to any recently established state of government, or to any supposable better state of civil society—that such authority still rests where it did, in the king and parliament of the united kingdom. But, as to the discordances which were perceived by the pure reason of such men as Mr. Locke, so at variance with the harmony of states ; and those claims on conscience, so inconsistent with every thing sacred in morality and religion—these still remain : the favourable opportunity passed away, like fine weather, in the time of harvest, when nothing is done. The grain was ripe ; but those who ought to have reaped, were not ready. The active powers of reformation were rather seen than felt, seen in principle, not felt, never realized in practice.

And here it may be proper to check the reader—he has been so checked before) from supposing, or myself, if I have led him to suppose, that I have been treating, philosophically, on " the Laws relative to Education." I have been stating facts, not ascertaining principles. It is a fact, that English Universities are civil corporations ; that as such, they are invested with privileges from the legislature ; can possess property ; may have a public seal ; and are subject to certain statutes and forms, for their government and order; that they are national corporations: these are all facts; and it is a fact, that the authority,<sup>1</sup> which first gave them legal being, as corporations, still remains, and, on proper occasions, in the way of supreme visitation, may be called forth; that the legislature, as guardian of the public interest, without encroaching on the limits of a University's authority, still holds over it an original prerogative, its paramount right of controul; and that as guardian of the public interest, it is its duty to regulate such a corporation, for the happiness and utility of the commonwealth. These are all facts. Had I been speaking of Universities, and the Laws of Education, according to Nature and Science, I have a few sentiments on Universities still reserved, somewhat in harmony perhaps with Adam Smith, in his WEALTH OF NATIONS: and certainly I do not think with Montesquieu, that the Laws of Education, (though it is a fact, often a too serious one, that they do) ought to relate to the principle of Government; a maxim, which would defeat the aim of the best political writers on Education, and confound that as a monopoly, which ought to be left free, in a Republic of Letters *.

III. I proceed next to consider what there may be supposed to be in the present Constitution of Universities, which seems to require reformation.

And here, perhaps, the writer may be allowed to acquaint his readers, that more than 30 years ago he was encouraged by several gentlemen of Cambridge to undertake an INQUIRY into the Nature of Subscription to the 39 Articles, it being understood that he had turned his thoughts more particularly that way; and that the work led him into a wider field than he was at first aware of, comprehending a variety of particulars, which concern that learned body. This circumstance led to something more of familiarity than he should otherwise have had, with a few topics, which now force themselves again on his notice, so as to occasion at present a feeling rather of delicacy, than of difficulty. The delicacy of the subject he feels in a very high degree—partly from his own incompetency; and partly from an unwillingness to give pain to any good man, or to afford him an occasion of censure. The reader has already been told how insensibly, and without design, the present work arose: he is now further informed, that he has already found his punishment in his own feelings: but he thinks no one has a right to censure before he reads; nor to condemn before he suffers himself to comprehend the writer's entire views.

To counteract, in some sort, his own feelings, and to guard against, if possible, the imputation of too much vanity and presumption, the reader is further informed, that the narrative must be understood to proceed now as much, or more, according to the sentiments of others, than in propria personâ. The vouchers for what follows will be, men, who were acting members in the University, men of considerable abilities and of acknowledged integrity, or, at least, were of some rank in the literary world, and once members of that learned body: and, though it may not in every instance be necessary to refer to the particular persons, or the particular page of a publication, the reader who has perused the preceding pages will stand in need of no directory.

1. The first point to be noticed here concerns obsolete statutes, that is, such statutes as in act have no force, though in theory they still bind.

And here I do not propose to touch on those things, which come within the reach of particular colleges, the powers of the University, or the authority of the local visitor. What concerns the expenses or any immoralities incident to the place, the fashions of dress, the modes of education, in short, all that belongs to the more peculiar province of academical governors and reformers, any further than it appertains, also, to the public statutes, falls not within our present contemplation—yet I cannot pass without cheerfully acknowledging, that in several particulars, of this description, there have been within these last 50 years many improvements introduced. Though the forms of matriculation continue the same, the terms for the admission of students are not in all cases so rigidly enforced; public examinations, particularly in the larger colleges at Cambridge, have been promoted; some injurious exemptions and indulgencies of the higher ranks of undergraduates have been discontinued; certain professorships have been rendered more effective; some useful, lectureships have been read; certain absurd scholastic practices have much given way; and, in several respects, the plans of education in both Universities have been somewhat liberalized. These are permanent benefits: these shew that in an inquisitive, enlightened age we may expect something good; and they reflect honour on the promoters of them.

Still the greatest admirers of our Universities, who, on “surveying the fine Public and College Libraries, the professorships with liberal stipends, the spacious, airy buildings, the commodious, retired apartments for students, the gardens and groves, the classic walks and agreeable retreats, the venerable antiquity of the places, with the many eminent men who having proceeded from them naturally inspire the young student with a noble emulation—think no places in Europe so well adapted to a studious life as these famous institutions,” even these gentlemen admit, that some things in them require reform*. And these some things are not small. In the affairs of human life, good and evil are wont to be intermixed. But it belongs to superior wisdom and power to over-rule the whole for the public interest. In the same manner as in a musical instrument of the finest tones, and constructed on the most scientific principles, there will be, there must be, some discords; but all discords need not end in dissonance; and it becomes those whose business it is to tune instruments, so to distribute the discords as to produce as much melody and harmony as possible; and by vibrations well-proportioned to produce complete concord. So the variety, which necessarily must exist in universities should not only conspire to produce peace among themselves, but assist the national harmony, should produce, if I may so speak, constitutional consistency. But—to speak to what was proposed.

These Statutes and Charters, then, are of a two-fold nature; one relating to Colleges, the other to Universities; both in this respect having a certain analogy with each other, in being made at different times, Popish and Protestant, and under different circumstances, of customs, literature, and religion; and both so heterogeneous, as to be incapable of being brought, at any given distance of time, into a bond of friendship, and of being considered as one family. To speak less ambiguously, some of these Statutes are illegal and unconstitutional, some, though practicable, are not enforced; others are wholly unpracticable; some, if even reduced to practice, would appear indecorous, and those who complied with them disreputable; others are absurd, and more than one contradictory to another, and absolutely unintelligible: so that, taken all together, they may be considered, “Tohu Vabohu,” a mass without form and void. This has been the judgment of several learned gentlemen of both Universities.

Now I shall not overcrowd my page, nor presume on the reader's indulgence, by producing, uniformly, how easily soever it might be done, examples, and positive proofs. I shall content myself with appealing to the testimony of two learned gentlemen many years since of the University of Oxford; one, if I mistake not, a Tutor* in one of the Colleges, the other (1726) a Principal†, and both attested by a modern ingenious and sensible writer, now living, a Doctor of Divinity of the same University *. This subject is pursued through several pages in a work well known; and in addition to these I must add the testimony of a gentleman of the law, formerly a member of the other University: the latter observes—after giving at full length, the Statuta in admissione Inceptorum in Artibus, (Masters of Arts) legenda, ad quorum observationem singuli tenentur virtute Juramenti—"that the times and circumstances are so altered, that it will appear this oath, which consists of nine paragraphs, cannot even by the best men be observed but in one or two at the most †."

Now—were such Charters and Statutes to be viewed simply as scraps of history or fragments of antiquity, we might consider them with the same curiosity, with which we examine an old coin; and with the same indifference, with which we consult an ancient manuscript. The matter is here very different: they come to us in serious form; they make rigid demands; they bind us to solemn obligations; and, where reason and conscience are called into exercise, mere curiosity becomes folly, raillery would be impertinence, and indifference a crime.

These Dissertations are not intended to form a string of railing accusations; nor does the writer mean to question the sincerity and integrity of the many learned men, who, by their public acts, have given countenance to this system; nor to dispute the grounds and reasons, on which they have satisfied their own consciences. Let the truth be mixed with candour; let us admit that deference to the supreme authority—that a respect to the piety of those who directed these measures—(of which, however, more is generally believed than would, I fear, be found true) that the habit of be-believing what is customary may be suffered to pass as a formality—that with a conviction of general truths, and of an obedience to reasonable obligations, we may dispense with particular exceptions, with unreasonable, impracticable demands—that all corporations must be bound to some laws—and that innovations are often hazardous, sometimes even dangerous—and, that what was given and sanctioned in the gross, may be so received and tolerated. Add to these considerations, the persuasion, that however many good men might wish a change, (and many have devoutly wished it and no doubt still do) yet as individuals they could not begin it; and that the whole University, without the assistance of the Legislature, could not effect one, that would be essential—that they have authority only to steer the vessel—but that others must freight it, and direct the port, to which it should sail. Let us suppose that arguments, derived from these sources, and from higher, if higher we can conceive, have had their weight on many honest and good minds.

Still let the circumstances of the case be as strong as they may be, the evil remains in all its force. It has, no doubt, perplexed and disturbed many conscientious minds; not merely from a sense, however reasonable and just, of any personal interest; nor from a love of literature, however laudable and honourable; but from a feeling of a purer, higher kind, the love of truth: in the present state of our Charters and Statutes, they consider the practice of a very serious tendency. Believing, that the human conscience is held, as with a golden chain, by the principles of morality and religion; and, that what impairs our natural sentiments and sensibilities tends to dissolve the tie; to leave conscience at large, and without restraint;—thus believing, they think that our received practice ensnares, as by a secret trap, our unsuspecting youth; festers and shackles their minds for future exertions and capabilities, as with screws and fetters; and that the evils introduced into society at large are incalculably great. Hence it is, we may presume, without the danger of a mistake, that several who have passed through the University with credit, choose to come away without honours; that some who have taken a first degree have not allowed themselves to take the second: for a similar reason, a late Chancellor refused, on being appointed to his high office, the customary compliment of a degree of LL. D. On looking into the book of Graduates, it will be found, that many who took the degree of A. B. have never proceeded to that of A. M.; some, no doubt, for very good reasons, and contrary to their wishes, because much against their interest.

It has been lamented by many serious persons, that this subject has hitherto obtained so little attention from our legislators; and that nothing should have been done on their own motion and authority, to remove these obsolete statutes, and introduce others more agreeable to our laws, more congenial with the existing manners of society, and more in harmony with the present state of literature in our Universities: the best apology, the most reasonable pretence, for which (oversight let me call it) they have thought must be, that the inconsistencies and imperfections of such Statutes have been very sparingly examined, and, perhaps, never, in their full extent and magnitude, laid before them*. Otherwise, amidst the several less (though they have not been small) improvements, made even within our memory, this greatest of all could not have escaped their notice; and that academical institutions should have practicable, rational, and good laws, which may influence the consciences of youth, and of intelligent members drawn from all orders in the community, is, in the judgment of such serious persons, of the greatest importance.

* The motion, and most curious debates on that motion, in the British senate, in 1772 and 1773, related only to the subscription to the 89 Articles, in consequence of petitions from various clergymen, (including also dissenting ministers) masters of arts, and doctors of divinity, physic, and law, in both Universities. See, A Chinese Fragment, anonymous, but written by F. J. Bates, Esq.

Some who have discussed the subject of oaths, have maintained, that according to the strict letter of the New Testament all oaths are unlawful for true Christians*; and without now inquiring how far such opinion is well-founded, the practice and doctrines of the primitive Christians seem to favour it. "I am a Christian," appears to have been their only oath, which was at the same time a testimony to their principles, and often the act of signing their own death-warrant†. St. Chrysostom's Homilies are full of Testimonies against oaths; and in one, where he has been speaking against abstinence from food as of less consequence than abstaining from oaths, to avoid being taken up too short, he explains himself, by speaking (using the words of Christ) against swearing at all‡. And some enlightened and virtuous Heathens have countenanced the same opinion§. But be this as it may, (for these matters shall not be insisted on now) no heathen nation ever had such oaths||

† Epist. Circularis de Polycarpi Martyrio, X. It may be said, perhaps, that such-like oaths only relate to swearing by the Genius of Cæsar; and that oaths administered by the lawful authority, with a right end, and with the awful name, may be defended from the New Testament. My argument does not require me to go into the subject, and the reader is referred to the Commentators on the New Testament, Whitby, Hammond, Grotius, &c. who have discussed this subject.

|| These oaths, on many accounts, may be called party-oaths, and are very different, in my humble opinion, in several respects, from the patriotic oath, taken by the Athenian youth, quoted by Stobæus: Serm. 41, p. 243. Ed. Lugd.: as applied by Bishop Warburton to what are called Test Oaths, I hope I may be allowed to say, I have shewn elsewhere, it was very different. Inquiry into the Nature of Subscription to the 39 Articles, 2nd edit. p. 119; and, I think, it might be proved that the Athenian oath was essentially different from those party oaths required in our Universities. I have said, in the text, enleagued to such laws, as are now alluded to; neither could they, with any arts of sophistry, have defended them: nor can such oaths, however sanctioned by custom, or fenced by authority, among us, be supported on any strictly rational and moral principles. Were we playing comedy-fancies, indeed, we might go off the stage with the lover's plea—

Ὁρκούς μὴ δύναν οὐατ' εἰς ἀθανάτων.

But we are acting true parts; and, without defining, or scrutinizing into, the nature, extent, or obligation of our oaths, we are pointing to the Statutes: these should be contemplated as realities, and spoken of with real feelings; as evils, which if the legislature introduced, the legislature should remove; if it did not, it has one more reason for abolishing them, as being illegal, unconstitutional formalities.

It is observed by one of great authority with us*, that that no heathen nation ever had such,—let me add—so many oaths, as our Christian; and the reader may not dislike to hear the words of the great Erasmus: *Revolve priscorum annales; quando comperies tantum fuisse jurandi, quantum nunc est inter Christianos? Et ubi plus perjuriorum? Jurandi finis nullus est: jurat, &c. jurat, &c. jurat, &c. Excute juramenti articulos, et videbis jurisjurandum non minus esse ludicrum, quam est eorum qui suscipiunt professionem septem artium liberalium, aut juris, aut theologie—at lingua dirumpit hæc omnia vincula:—and much more in the same serious and pungent style. Vid. Des. Erasmi, LINGUA, sive de Linguae Utu, atque Abusu.*

* The whole passage reads thus—“Rursus in moribus et institutis Scholarum, Academiarum, Collegiorum, et similium Conventuum, quæ doctorum hominum sedibus, et eruditionis culturæ destinata sunt, omnia progressui Scontiarum adversa inveniuntur. Baconi Novum Organon, xc. Agreeably to this, he says, elsewhere, and wisely, addressing James I.—Etenim inter Majestatis tuæ Canones prudentissimos, illum invenio, “In omni consuetudine vel exemplo, Tempora spectanda sunt, quando primum res cæptæ: in quibus si vel confusio regnaverit, vel inscientia, derogat illud imprimis authoritati rerum, atque omnia reddit suspecta: Quamobrem, quandoquidem Academiarum Instituta a temporibus hisce haud paulo indoctiori-

“ every thing in our academical institutions is found adverse to the progress of the sciences ;” an observation we may say, made many years ago—Granted. But were there not a tendency in the human understanding to burst all unnatural restraints, as in the human body, to throw off the effects of repletion, this would appear, even still, most emphatically true. But our oaths, and our statutes, those ancient barriers to inquiry, are, happily for literature, soon, and without remorse, easily left behind. The mind, when in earnest pursuit of truth, must proceed unshackled, and will defy our boundaries. When Reason asserts its prerogatives, Nature will take its course, in the same manner as water will find its level,—and as a due proportion of heat and cold creates a necessary poize or equilibrium in the atmosphere. Compare our schools, our lectures, our professorships, with the public exercises enjoined on them by our statutes: how is every thing at variance! The places that knew many of them, know them no more for ever! Conscience has no feelings about them; nor is there even left to her room for the discharge of her duties. For such-like matters the time, in many respects, is past, and will not turn back, because our statutes stand still. Science knows no law but eternal truth; the mind no limits but its own capability. There is reason to believe, that the cause of virtue has been more affected by these statutes, than the cause of science.

But what statutes could do, they have done. They might, and in some respects have, retarded the course of science *; they did prescribe the books to be read, and the bus, eo magis convenit, ut examini denuo subjoiciantur. De Augmentis Scientiarum, Lib. ii.—Do not these words apply equally to our times as to Lord Bacon's?

* What was the reason that the University of Oxford suppressed and degraded the Essay on the Human Understanding, by Locke, one of her own sons?—(he was of Christ Church)—It was contrary to the Philosophical order in literature that was to be pursued. But science keeps a pace slow, yet sure. There were some eminent men of that period, who had been, so to speak, long confined in a sort of Philosopher's * Cave, accustomed to see only shadows of things passing, as it were, on a wall before them; but who, being drawn out, and beholding the sun, received a pure light, obtained a clear vision; and the light which they admitted they dispersed around: many great men, who were before the revival of letters, were such persons. Other great men arose afterwards, who may be said never to have been confined and shackled in that cave, but accustomed to move at large, and to behold realities. Bacon, Newton, Locke, were such;—and in their presence the Statutes were nugatory.

Human philosophy would not be stopped; but it should seem, as though the contrivers of our oaths and statutes were determined to retard the progress of divine: morals they enfeebled, and they shackled theology; and the injury that was done them, Truth and Benevolence, could they assume a human form, might blush to see.

Faith. One of the Oxford Statutes runs, it seems, thus: Aristotelem similiter, totamq. Peripateticorum Doctrinam pro viriti defendere teneantur, Stat. Tit. 6, Sect. 2. This clause, I suppose, Dr. Newton, before mentioned, quotes from the large Body of Statutes; as it does not occur in the Parecbolæ or Excerpta Stat. Oxon. published 1705: but as the extract there lies, it reads strong enough—“Aristotelis Metaphysica legat, textum, quoad fieri potest, de-lucide exponendo, et quæstiones Metaphysicas, quæ apud Scriptores antiquos et modernos agitantur, prout e textu Aristotelis emergunt succincte venti-lando.” Dr. Newton, speaking on this and other Oxford statutes, observes, “Whilst our education continues in this state, it is impossible, that truth, or knowledge, or learning, should increase.” It was fortunate both for Cambridge and Oxford, that when the Statutes were given, the Cartesian philosophy had not been broached—for Des-Cartes was not then born; otherwise, (for some time previous to Newton, the Cartesian philosophy was generally received in the schools) there would, no doubt, have been a statute provided to make that the law for philosophy in both Universi-ties.

Had the opinion of such a man as William Penn been asked on this subject, or should it ever be asked, (Penn had well considered matters of this kind) he perhaps might have said—"We have no personal interest in such things: we are not ambitious of either a church or state*—comprehension; but as friends we will give our sober advice. Let your Statutes follow the genius of the English Constitution, and preserve the balance of religious opinions among the Sectaries. In literary transactions our friends would use no paper-money; but if ye choose it, see that the characters on it do not invite or admit fraud: and, if your specie is worn and almost effaced by time, get a new coin from the proper mint; let it wear the image and superscription of the reigning times. Our friends care little for your Lion, or your St. George and the Dragon; but they are well-wishers to Britannia; and they would be pleased to read your motto, 'fiat Justitia,' or 'Veritas prævalebit.'"

There was an order of persons wisely appointed by the ancient Athenian government to inspect the laws every year, in order to correct what were found contradictory, and to supersede what were useless†: and we may take a hint on what concerns our University-Statutes from our own ancestors.

Our University of old time possessed its statuta antiqua‡. But, besides, in the reigns of Hen. VIII. Edw.

‡ A Complete Collection of the Cambridge Statutes was printed in 1785; but, as it appears to have been made for the use of the Public Library, and two or three of the University-Officers, and a copy could not, I apprehend, be procured, it may not be improper to state the order of them, which, I think, is as follows: Statuta Antiqua—Statuta non in ordinem redacta—

VI. Mary, and Elizabeth, it had its peculiar Statutes, better adapted, as was supposed, to each period respectively, consisting in part of certain of the old Statutes, and others more specific and appropriate. Our old Statutes, too, were less in number, more clear, for the times, and less perplexed, as to the matter, than even the present: nor were they encumbered, as the mass of things, imposed by Elizabeth and James are, with disciplinarian forms and doctrinal verbosities*.

Yet the ancient Statutes were considered in Edward VIth's reign, with respect to those times, as "semibarbara," et obscura, et propter vetustatem plerumq. non intellecta†; and, accordingly, many new ones were introduced by the royal authority. And should not Queen Elizabeth's, according to nature and right reason, be treated in the same way? Did not she herself take such liberties with those of her predecessors?

"Item Statutum est, quod omnes et singuli statum baccalaurei in quacunque facultate assumentes jurent, quod Statuta, privilegia, et consuetudines approbatas istius Universitatis pro viribus observabunt, et, quantum in eis est, observari procurabunt, et contra statuta, privilegia, et consuetudines approbatas, minime appellabunt, nec hujusmodi appellantibus consilium auxilium aut favorem præstabunt. This was administered by one of the Praetors: Idem juramentum quod præstent omnes Licentiandi in sua admissione in quacunque facultate, et etiam omnes solenniter resumentes, ac etiam omnes in quacunque facultate Lecturi ante quam legant.—I have not the Statute-book at hand while this sheet is going through the press; but it occurs to me that the oath taken by a Theologus was more specific and theological, about attending Missas, Exequias, &c. † Introduction to Edw. VIth's Statutes.

The circumstances in our Universities being now greatly altered, new expedients are required; and a different turn of thinking in the nation demands a different application of them. Laws should keep pace with our manners; so only can they be consistent with nature and the state of mankind. When the wind shifts its corner, the vessel must change its direction; when a river alters its course, our banks and our sluices must be differently placed: man changes his dress and his food according to the different climates under which he lives, the different stages of his existence, and the different seasons of the year; and physicians alter their prescriptions according to any change in the constitution, and the mixtures or different appearances of diseases: and no rule of common sense is clearer than that of Montesquieu, with regard to manners; that "when men's manners change, their laws also should change."

Laws which are to affect the conscience, and relate to the understanding, should be more strictly referrible to nature and right reason than any other, if one law should be more natural and reasonable than another. For the human conscience, like the sensitive plant, in this respect, does not require handling, to be put in motion, and certainly is of a nature too delicate, and susceptible, to be treated very royally and authoritatively. The human understanding is, also, variable, improveable, very proud, and very powerful; too ample in its range, too lofty in its aspirations and measurements, to be determined by left-handed, short-sighted statutes.

All statutes are perpetual rules, as long as the authority which has established them has discovered no intention that they should be abolished. All laws, therefore, that are useleses, or prejudicial, should be cancelled: for it is equally absurd in theory, as fatal in practice to society, to pretend that laws once made should always subsist, however inconvenient they shall be found.

It is not deemed necessary to alice our present Statutes into small portions, in order to point out, by examples, particular defects: but the body is laid entire before our readers, that they may judge from the whole. Every member of the University, and no less every member of the British Senate, ought (how little soever it is now known) to be acquainted with its contents; which, taken together with our College Statutes, will shew, how far our practice accords, or can accord, with them, and how far they are, in their present state, adapted to modern times.

“The revocation of laws (I am using Burlamaqui’s * words), may be made two ways; either expressly or tacitly; for when the Sovereign, well instructed in the nature of things, neglects, during a long space of time, to make a law observed, or when he permits formally the affairs which relate to it to be regulated in a manner different to its disposition, there then results a sort of presumption, that such law is abolished, which falls, as it were, of itself, though the legislature has not expressly abrogated it.” These remarks are most true, but exclusively applicable only to laws, where simple disuse is implied, without any further requisition; but not where a law, while it is suffered to fall into disuse, is still bound upon us by an oath: it may be dead, as to itself, in effect, but it is bound on a being that has life; it is tying a dead body round a living man; forcing a duty—which, after all, may be impracticable—out of our punishment. All the wisdom of the legislature cannot compromise these matters; all the subtlety of the Schools cannot untie these knots: there is no medium; the knot should be cut asunder, by either abolishing the oath or the statute, or perhaps, better still, by abolishing them both together.

It not being pretended that these Statutes were ever expressly or formally abolished, it is not necessary to say any thing on the subject.

A celebrated Scotch lawyer, many years ago, after having mentioned the ardent desire of the Scottish Parliament to amend their laws, adds, that “one of his inducements for writing on that subject was, that though a lawyer, he found a difficulty in understanding them* :” a very sufficient reason certainly for a lawyer’s writing on them; and have not we similar reasons? Has it not appeared that we have additional reasons? Reasons, for wishing these Statutes repealed or altered, far more strong?

2. Our next observation relates to the SENATE, more particularly that part of it called the Caput, which consists of five members of the Senate, a Doctor of Divinity, a Doctor of Laws, a Doctor of Physic, a non-Regent, and Regent, together with the Vice-Chancellor.

Nothing need be said of the mode of electing the Caput; the remarks to be made on the power exercised by it will answer our purpose.

Some have spoken of our body of learned men in the University as a Republic—the word occurs in our Statutes in reference to that learned body—somewhat figuratively, perhaps, though significantly, as, when we speak of the community of learned men, we say, the Republic of Letters. Some more specifically (on examining the governing powers) have thought they found in its forms and principles a resemblance to that curious and admired structure of a Republic, the English Constitution: the Chancellor (or Vice-Chancellor, which here is the same) being as the King, the Caput, as the House of Lords, the Non-Regents and Regents, as the House of Commons.—The allusion is here the rather made, because some have thought they perceived such a resemblance in certain other Corporations†.

* Sir George Mackenzie’s Introduction to his Observations on the Scotch Statutes.

† Particularly in the City of London.

This resemblance, however, would be less in power and privilege than in form : even in the form there are some essential differences ; and in its power the difference, in my humble opinion, would be still more essential.

That essential difference (to notice only that one) consists in the mode of proposing a Grace, as it is called, corresponding to a Bill in the British Senate. Each House of Parliament, we know, has its peculiar privileges ;—each House can originate a Bill, which must be read, and approved, three times in each House, before it can go to the King, and pass into a law. And one most peculiar privilege of the Lower House is, that it cannot merely originate bills in general, (in common with the Upper House) but can only originate those which affect their more immediate vital interests, as the representatives of the people. It will be seen, this allusion is to Money Bills, which the Upper House cannot only not originate, but must not, in the smallest degree, alter. This is deemed an essential privilege of the House of Commons.

Now, on perusing the Statute de Capite—et de ejus autoritate (Cap. 41) we find, that the Non-Regents and Regents are not only without the particular privilege, but even without the general one. They are incapable of originating a single Grace. Every Grace must have the consent of all the Caput, even before it can be proposed to the Senate. So that the whole power of making laws for our Republic lies virtually not in the Senate, but in the Caput. True it is, that individually, each member of the Caput is also a member of the Senate ; but that makes no difference ; it is as a Caput they act, as a Caput of six, independent of the whole body, and even, as we see, with a full controul over it.

This, by many members of both Universities, has been considered an inconvenience, and felt as a serious evil. They have asked whether a body of learned men, composed of Doctors in the different faculties, Masters of Colleges, Tutors of Colleges, and Professors, are not likely to have wisdom enough to know, and to know best, their own interest, and ties strong enough to bind them to the general interests, the interests of the University? This stopping a question in the Caput, they think, is like cutting off a stream at the fountain-head, or preventing the vital fluid from taking its course through the animal body; that it is political death. Certain it is, that many excellent men, after nursing wise, benevolent, and pious plans in their own bosoms, have never ventured to bring them even to the shape of words, from a well-calculated presentiment that they would be strangled at their birth—that they would not be suffered to come before the Senate *; and they, accordingly, from the certainty of a failure, have thought it fruitless to make experiments. They have perceived that the powers of the Caput draw off, as it were, the privileges of the Academical Body, in the same manner as a præternatural protuberance absorbs the juices, and exhausts the strength of the animal body; or as certain plants, by their juxta—position, and powerful influence, will stop the growth and fruitfulness of some trees.

This paralyzing power is thus expressed in the Statute de Capite: Horum autem autoritas est, in omni Senatu, et—Congregatione de omnibus Petitionibus prius decernere, quam ad Senatum deferantur; ita ut illæ solæ Gratiae approbentur, et Regentibus et Non-Regentibus proponantur, in quas singuli eorum consenserint: et si quicquam in Senatu petatur, aut concedatur, quod non sit prius istorum judicio et consensu comprobatum, nullum erit omnino et invalidum, nisi his nostris Statutis aliter cautum sit.”

* The Grace offered in 1771 by the late Mr. Robert Tyrwhit, of Jesus College, so distinguished by his worth and abilities, for the abolition of subscriptions at the time of taking degrees, was stopped in the Caput. See Gentleman's Magazine, Vol. XLI. p. 263. One also proposed Dec. 7, 1787, by Dr. Edwards, and I think one offered at Oxford, a few years before, met with the same fate.

Such a power is certainly injurious and most unreasonable; though, I own, I do not see why Dr. Jebb, a very intelligent and spirited person, should call it arbitrary and unstatuteable*, seeing the Statute of Elizabeth gives the Caput that power in full force and form; unless, indeed, he speaks (as I suppose he does) in reference to some ancient Statute, or to the tendency and import of any resolution, passed by the House of Commons, (of which notice shall be presently taken) concerning any Grace, which he supposed militated against one, which he deemed of the greatest importance.

When gentlemen speak of our Academia as a Republic, they would not be supposed (nor would I be supposed) to have in their eye a Democracy, at least those ancient democracies, which rather exemplified the passions of a rabble, as influenced by demagogues, than a system to arrive at public opinion, and to express the public will; so arranged, as to produce reason and virtue, to keep alive public liberty, and to promote the public happiness; principles, as an ingenious writer well expresses it, equally susceptible, producible, and of equal force, “as those which actuate the mercenaries of a profligate and ambitious prince†.”

Here I think I perceive the ground on which rested the remark of a learned gentleman of Cambridge, which I heard him once express, “that our Universities would be the last institutions to admit improvements.” For the honour of literature, may it not prove true! But, can we conceive, that a great spirit of reform may readily pervade a Body, where such an enormous power is lodged in so few hands, like a small cog, which, if it can give motion to a mighty machine, can also effectually stop it, and suddenly? We may not suppose it, till some change is made in this respect: till either the proper authorities abolish this power; or till the power stops of its own accord, suffering its exercise to lie dormant, with other obsolete statutes; or till it, on a sober presentiment of public opinion, sinks itself, as it were, into the wishes of the majority: till then, however provisional any measure may be for the good of the Senate, and the University at large; however honourable to literature, or favourable to virtue and religion; however useful to the state; however consistent with the principles of the British Constitution; though the measure should be “omnibus suis numeris absoluta,” still it may be stopped! contrary surely to the principles of a true republic, or at least to that form which Aristotle pronounces the best*; and essential to that power, which is deemed the great privilege in our mixed monarchy†, or British Republic, the English Constitution.

† Mr. Hobbes, I am aware, speaks of a mixed monarchy as a non-entity. De Cive. Cap. 6. But this book was dictated by that great man's passions, rather than his prejudices, and, it is to be feared, though it establishes some truths, betrays much inconsistency, if not insincerity. In speaking of our mixed Monarchy as a Republic, I have but conformed to the language of our old, and best political, writers. One of our Greek Professors, so well known in our History of Greek Literature, Sir William Smith, afterwards Secretary to Edward the VIth and Queen Elizabeth, published a valuable, though now scarce, book, with this title, De Republica Anglorum, 1583; to which I am indebted for an excellent passage quoted in my, Four Letters on the English Constitution, p. 119. 2d edit.

insinuate, that, as well from the mode of appointment, as from the offices and characters of the gentlemen to be chosen, the election will not preserve a general correspondence with the description. But, not to say, that in all statements of this kind some allowances must be made for generalization, can we suppose, that in these six, selected with whatever fidelity and care, there will be more of those qualities required in the settling of a serious question, than in the whole senate besides? The Caput, we know, of any particular year, sink into the Senate the next; and from the very condition of the gentlemen, of whom the Senate is of necessity composed, there must always be in it a greater aggregate of knowledge, gravity, and prudence, as well as talent for business and good faith, than there can possibly be, (whatever personal respect may be due to each of them individually) in only six detached members of it. Besides, while man is man, he is liable to be mistaken in his judgment—though his errors may be innocent, and his prejudices, however unfortunate for himself, and dangerous to others, may be only to be lamented, but cannot be prevented or over-ruled. He may act wrong, too, from motives, which incline him to consult his private interest or expectations before the public good. No attempt, so invidious and precarious, shall here be presumed upon, as to give particular examples. Certainly not. Men are not always competent judges of each others motives, whether they are conscientious, corrupt, or mixed: but a general opinion may be hazarded without the danger of a mistake—that influence, corrupt influence, may easily reach the few, where the many could not possibly be affected by it.

English Universities must always be an object of consideration in the view of government; and the minister of the day find his account in their interest and support. A University, also, will, proportionably, find it their advantage to follow the measures of the minister, and to gratify his wishes: and it will be happy (and so every thing may be honourable) when the real convictions and principles of gentlemen correspond with their professions and services. That for preferments many are indebted to their political friendships and alliances, is a fact so well known, as to require no elucidation*.

Suppose a case, which affects the Caput and Senate. A gentleman wishes to offer a popular Grace, that is, one likely to interest the majority. It shall be perfectly constitutional. Surely he who offers such a grace should be permitted to take the judgment of this assembly of learned men: but no—it is not agreeable to government, which here means the political views of the minister of the day. He wishes to have it thwarted. Now, who does not see, from the number of the voters in the Senate, that his means, though great, are not ample enough to corrupt the Senate, and to secure a majority? But, were his means even less, they would be more than enough to influence the Caput. This Council being only six, and most of them of a profession capable of church-preferment, and of an age ripe and ready to receive it, being, moreover, visible and prominent objects, which the eye of the minister can easily take in, such a body may readily come within the reach of his influence. Indeed he need be sure but of one vote; for one negative would as effectually stop the Grace as the veto of the whole Caput†.

* The learned Dr. Pearce, formerly Bishop of Rochester, (in the Memoirs of his own Life, written by himself, and prefixed to his works) pleasantly enough tells us, when he first waited on Sir Robert Walpole, the minister addressed him in some such way as this: (I quote from memory) “Well—Dr. Pearce, I perceive you want me to serve you;—but I must first know, how you can serve me,” &c. This matter not relating to the University, is only mentioned incidentally.

† It will be seen, by consulting the Debates of the House of Commons for 1772 and 1773, that the Petition of certain Clergy and Laity for relief, in the terms of subscription, was strongly opposed by the Minister, and the bill introduced by Sir William Meredith was lost. It is natural to sup-

It has been observed, that there never was a good government which did not consist of the three simple species of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy*; that in all such governments there have been assemblies, in which resided the power of the whole nation; and, that a democracy can only suit a small town. Be this as it may—of those forms there are numerous diversities: and, as in all human contrivances there are degrees of good and evil, so in different policies there are different shades of liberty, of which the measure will be, the manner in which the legislative assembly is constituted and conducted, for promoting liberty, virtue, and public happiness. It is, therefore, essential to every Republic and every form of polity approaching one, to establish the right of suffrage; and what ever checks that, throwing us back into the arms of aristocracy, or despotism, destroys every idea of a Republic. Hence the five officers called the Ephori, chosen from the people, were experienced to be a serious evil, and are greatly censured by Aristotle as an inconsistency in the Lacedemonian Constitution, and indeed as the ruin of it†.

The tribunes, those two, afterwards ten, officers, chosen by the Roman people, with a power similar to that of the Ephori, and immediately for the protection of the people, found in that power the means of their subjection. They had no suffrage, but they could stop the Senate and people from voting by their veto: a single tribune could stop all their proceedings‡. This inordinate stretch of power was pose, therefore, that he was not favourable to the measure proposed at Cambridge, and that therefore the Grace might be stopped.

the occasion of great confusion, and eventually was made the instrument of the entire overthrow of the commonwealth. For Augustus Cæsar, too well knowing the strength of this power, though it had been suppressed for some years, revived it again, and reconsecrated it; and rendering it perpetual in himself, rivetted the chains of slavery indissolubly on the Roman people.

The Cretans had a Council of ten (called κορμυται) similar to that of the Ephori among the Spartans; and it is described by Aristotle as having some worse qualities, and producing some worse effects*. It was by some such Council also as that we are alluding to, that the little Republic of Geneva, whatever changes it passed through afterwards, (and it underwent many†) lost, in its infancy, liberty, falling into intrigue and aristocracy: and by such a Council it is now governed.

The tendency of this principle is found to be the same, whether taken on a large or small scale. The Corporations of England were in their origin very beneficial, in affording protection to commerce against the barbarism of the feudal Lords; but, that being past, they are now become, through a change of manners, not only useless, but extremely pernicious. They are no benefit to the trade of cities and towns, and none to its magistracies: they clog the former; for where there are undue privileges, they must be proportionably undue disqualifications: borough-corruption, therefore, is become proverbial. These boroughs are now a corrupt part of our system; and it is usually carried on by the way in which votes are managed, and freemen made; which is most effectually through the instrumentality of a Council.

As for a literary Corporation, with a government by its Senate and President, (which might somewhat resemble that of the first Christian churches) a body of men, approved and distinguished by their degrees, their offices, their professions, and their characters, many of them of the very first attainments in science, and of the greatest purity of intentions—such a body is surely capable of forming a judgment of its proper interests and privileges by its own wisdom, and of preserving its respectability by its independence: and it is difficult to conceive, that such a Council, as I have been describing, can afford it any information, dignity, or strength, which it does not possess in itself.

This matter, it is well known, is most admirably managed in the arrangement of the British House of Commons. Besides each member's giving his own vote singly in his proper place, and after his own judgment, the House can form a Committee of the whole House, where the entire business is examined clause by clause, corrections introduced, the blanks filled up; and an entirely new shape often is given to the bill. They have also private Committees (chosen by the members out of their own body, and understood to be best acquainted with the subject to be debated) for the purpose of making inquiry, reporting the result of their inquiries, and thus affording the House grounds and reasons for their debates: but they never could allow of a Committee, or Council, which might shut the door on all their inquiries, and reasonings, and stop all their proceedings.

3. Let us consider, in what way our Statutes may affect our literature.

To this part of our subject some allusion has already been made; though rather comparatively, than positively; and in reference to what is essential in the nature of science, than accidental in its circumstances. For, though our moral feelings may be greatly and radically damaged by Statutes, our philosophy may be affected by them in a different manner. It may incur the blame of crime, without feeling itself at all criminal. For, if men reason, they will conclude; and, if they believe any given number of propositions to be true, all the articles and statutes in the world can never make them appear false. It is true, through the feeling or the dread of authority, they may be obliged to be circumspect; but, if they can spring a fence, they will think it no crime, and conscience will take no harm.

It might be an amusing, perhaps, an useful, speculation, to inquire, generally, how science is affected by human law; how it may be assisted, and how it may be injured by it. Such inquiry would, probably, shew, that like religion and commerce, it should by law neither be checked nor forced; not being of the nature of grafts, to be impregnated by sharp incisions and violent insertions; nor of hot-house plants, to be immaturely raised by artificial heat; but resembling rather seeds, which being carried by the winds, and sowing themselves by their natural strength, are nourished by the dews of Heaven. It may, indeed, be said, Honos alit artes; and on the principle of public utility, science may receive encouragement and reward; as on that of natural right it may claim protection: but there are cases in which the interference of law would do it incalculable evil.

In the Funeral Orations, annually delivered by the Athenian Orators, over those who fell in defence of their country, among the other praises bestowed on Athens, one was, on account of the freedom of its literature*; and to this superiority of its laws over other states, Cicero ascribes its superiority in literature.

The spirit of both the Greeks and Romans was in this respect very liberal. How different became that of Rome Christian! How abject its state under the Canons of her church, the Rules of her particular Orders, and the Statutes of her learned bodies! These were converted into a sort of men-traps, whereby the human understanding was strongly enthralled and fettered, and many improvements, many useful discoveries in science, long kept back from the world. Under the authority of the Decrees first collected into a body by Gratian in the year 1151, under Pope Eugenius III. the Philosophical Writings of Aristotle were proscribed, and those who read them excommunicated*. That great luminary of science, Friar Bacon, of Oxford, (a burning and shining light, that the tyranny of custom would have extinguished) was for a long while prevented from imparting his ideas by the Rules of his Order†; and the Opus Majus of that extraordinary man would never have appeared, had he not acted under a higher authority. Had Ferdinand, King of Spain, obeyed his Ecclesiastical Counsellors, Columbus could not have discovered America; and it might have remained undiscovered to this day: for the dogma of St. Augustine had become a sort of Church and School Law; and, in the case of Virgil, Bishop of Saltzburgh, who ventured to maintain the doctrine of the Antipodes, Pope Zachary had ordered him to be degraded by his Legate, and to be excommunicated. Copernicus, under the terror of ecclesiastical law, was obliged to keep back his system for forty years: and when poor Galileo maintained, that the sun was in the center of our system, and had a daily motion on its own axis, his writings were burned; the astronomer himself was thrown into prison; and being, at length, released from confinement, he was obliged to renounce the doctrine, and once in a week, for three years, to recite what were called the seven penitential

Psalms: Such was the blessed influence of church laws and statutes on geography, astronomy, and navigation !

In the year 1317 Pope John XXII. as we have seen, had ordered the Constitutions, with the other Decretals, to be read in the Schools at Cambridge*, and by them Philosophy, as we before observed, had been outlawed. But, at length, Aristotle was suffered to take her seat in the Schools of the Universities of Paris and England ; yet so dilacerated, distorted, and crippled, as to be scarcely known. Aristotle was not Aristotle ; but so mistranslated, corrupted, debased, and mysticised, with scholastic divinity, that Friar Bacon says, if he could have had his will, his writings should have been all burnt†. However, a barbarous jargon, called the Aristotelian philosophy, gave law to the Schools ; and this system, at once so authoritative and futile, furnished materials, at a comparatively late period, to the satire of Erasmus, and the philosophical indignation of Lord Bacon.

It is often found in experience, that laws which are the least expedient, become the most permanent ; such, particularly, are those which relate to science and religion : they became in a manner almost law and gospel there. For custom, of itself a tyrant, when strengthened by statutes, and emboldened by authority, may be expected to obtain a larger dominion, and to hold it for a greater length of years ; it swells by degrees to superstition, and will generate a species of idolatry in minds not naturally strong : and there are learned as well as illiterate vulgar, who will always find it easier to bow to rules, prescriptions, and precedents, than to serious thinking and patient research, or to listen to discoveries, when first new and undecorated, unsanctioned by any royal, canonical diploma. Hence philosophers must stand long alone; with few companions, fewer assistants, and often amidst much opposition, if not of persecution*; while Truth itself shall be heard to complain, "I have stretched out my hands, and no man regarded me."—Thus may Constitutions, Decrees, and Statutes, injure Logic, Ethics, Metaphysics, and Politics.

Now, Logic, Ethics, Metaphysics, and Politics, grow, as it were, out of the human constitution, and when drawn forth, as parts of literature, into systems, should, of course, be altogether natural in their structure, and of the nicest, most exact proportions. In the Schools, therefore, they ought to be altogether free, and reason be the only moderator. Law may do mischief, by bringing that under its controul, which is not properly of its jurisdiction. Should the Scholastic act contrary to the ordinances of society, then is the time for the law to counteract. But, that law may do them great injury, by controuling what is not properly of its jurisdiction, is an observation, which, I fear, has been found sadly true by experience; and proved to be so, by the laxity of the principles in an admired publication, the tendency of which is, to give something of plausibility to our school-morality; but which, I suspect, on impartial examination, would be found inconsistent with logical correctness, and with the author's better judgment†. True Political Expediency would, I suspect, be, to place certain matters on a better, more natural basis, that they may appear in a more defensible, more honourable form.

statutes, it is unnecessary to revive the hints that were then thrown out on statutable lectures, which are never read; on statutable professorships, which have been long ineffective; of statutable exercises, which are never performed; and of other statutable duties, which are never called into action*. Such observations, as I would hope has already appeared, were not written in a spirit of dislike to liberal institutions, but of concern, that our institutions are not still more liberalized. Such observations related principally to Cambridge; and due respect was paid to the apology, which should urge, that the state of literature, and the modes of instruction are now so altered, as to render them unnecessary, if not impracticable. And such apology, with the ready concession which I am disposed to make, would even be favourable to our present argument. Nor were such remarks made in a temper sufficiently disengaged, unaffected, or joyous, for satire or ridicule. Suffice it to have alluded to those ancient remains of a barbarous philosophy (slightly hinted at before), those impediments to truth and liberal science, I mean, the academical exercises enjoined at Oxford†, preparatory to taking degrees, and when taking them, and to the testimony of the gentlemen of Oxford already mentioned, who were too serious, too much in earnest for trifling, and too much attached to the interest of that learned body, to hold it in scorn; yet too erudite, not to treat such absurdities, although statutable, with indignation; and too honourable, when having occasion to speak of them, not to bear their faithful testimony against them.

† See DISPUTATIONES IN PARVISO; ANSWERING UNDER BACHELOR; and EXAMINATION, &c. With a string of Syllogisms, upon a common question, for the Oxford Schools, &c. The account may be seen in Dr. Keer's Essays, as given by Mr. Napleton, formerly a Resident Tutor of Brasen-Nose College, and by Dr. Newton, formerly Principal of Hertford College. It seems from Dr. Coblestone's (the present Master of Oriel College) sensible Reply to the Edinburgh Reviewers, on the subject of Academical Education at Oxford, that many and considerable improvements have been introduced there of late years. It may be therefore expected, that some ridiculous exercises have fallen into disuse: still the evils introduced by Statutes may leave bad effects, which will not easily or soon give way. For bad Statutes are like poisoned arrows; some of the matter may remain, after the weapon is removed.

But, that the reader, leaving the more limited view, might take the most prominent ground, and survey the subject in its full extent and magnitude, he was desired to ask the question, Why did Locke's writings meet with such illiberal treatment at Oxford? The curious Oxford Statute was quoted, Tit. 6, Sect. 2: Aristotelem similiter totamq. Peripateticorum doctrinam pro virili defendere teneantur. That is an answer to the question. And I shall here, in conformity with the rule which I had prescribed to myself, at the beginning of this Dissertation, and as a comment on this Statute, call in the testimony of one of our learned academics, to whom an appeal has been already made. He observes, in reference to this Statute, as follows:

“ I forgot, in my last paper, to mention, that our Christian mother of arts and sciences took a particular liking to an old heathen philosopher, Aristotle by name, to whose musty systems of Logic, Rhetoric, Politics, and Ethics, she was so much wedded, that she constituted them the standards of the arts to all succeeding generations, and by statute obliged her matriculated issue to defend and maintain all his peripatetical doctrines, right or wrong, to the last gasp of their breath, and the last drop of their ink; and it was further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that if any person should presume to dispute or deny the Stagyrice's opinion in any public exercise, the said public exercise should not pass pro forma; and, moreover, that the audacious delinquent should be fined five shillings for every such offence; a sum, which every philosophical Freethinker does not care to pay for pretending to being wiser than his forefathers.”

“ This is the best account we have of the origin and institution of the Aristotelian dominion in the Universities: we must dispute to no purpose, because our academical predecessors could not dispute without going to loggerheads; and thus the folly of our forefathers (like Adam’s sin) derives upon us the unhappy necessity of defending absurdities, and propagating falsehoods.” He adds, “ Whilst our education continues in this state, it is impossible that truth, or knowledge, or learning, should increase.” Dr. Newton makes a variety of other pertinent observations on what he calls “ our standard of philosophical faith.”

Such is the tendency of barbarous statutes; they possess a secret influence, which may be inimical to science, as much as open violence; not, indeed, like the hurricane, which overwhelms, and bears away the materials of, a building all at once; or which tears up a plantation by the roots; but, like the marshy grounds, on which you can neither build nor plant, without much draining, with other preparatory labour, and, after all, with great hazard of success. Thus philosophers, on making experiments, and ascertaining facts, may deduce principles, form in their own minds new systems, and their consciences will feel no pain, however opposite their conclusions may turn out to a philosophical creed, established by law; still such persons may be cautious in proposing their discoveries, and learned bodies will be backward in admitting them. For to be new is with many the same as being false: Custom, procreating by Statutes, though not having in her own right any natural claim to authority, yet becomes the parent of a spurious, numerous, powerful progeny, Prejudice, Conceit, Loquacity, Indolence, Ignorance, Self-Interest, and such-like: these, by their intrigues and cabals, their solemn disapprobations, senseless garrulities, and scholastic formalities, may retard truth for ages.

Our Cambridge Newtonians may, therefore, be happy, that Des Cartes was born long after our Royal Statutes were given: otherwise, there can be little reason to doubt, that our learned Universities would have been statutably bound to retain the Cartesian, as well as the Aristotelian philosophy. For at the time of Mr. Whiston (that is of Newton), the mathematics of Des Cartes was generally received there, or, as Mr. Whiston * expresses it, "it was alone in vogue with us at that time." How forcibly too is to be gathered from the Preface to Sir Isaac Newton's PRINCIPIA; and still more perhaps from a Dissertation of Dr. Henry More's, of Christ College, who, though a Platonist and Cabbalist (in which respect he stood almost alone), and even much alarmed at some part of the Cartesian philosophy, yet has most zealously, and somewhat elaborately †, defended those parts of it, so generally received at Cambridge. Dr. More speaks of a Triumvirate of Philosophers; of which Des Cartes was one. The other two (Newton and Locke, if I read him right) he had neither thoroughly studied; and he seems to have thought it beneath the dignity of his philosophy to give them a serious and ample perusal. And we have already noticed two learned members ‡ of Cambridge-University, who strenuously opposed the writings of Newton and Locke. So I must repeat, that the Newtonians may congratulate themselves that the giving of the Royal Statutes preceded the birth of Des Cartes; for, had there been a statute fixing his philoso-

But, we may expect, that no branches of literature will be so likely to be affected by the spirit of our Statutes, as Scripture-Criticism and Theology.

It is natural to suppose, that people of different religions should each severally take as the standard of their controversial appeals, and the rule of their academical exercises, that Book, which they consider as the source of their doctrines. On this principle the Reformation in England at first avowedly proceeded, and on this only, in strictness, can it be defended. This was the foundation-stone: hence the famous adage, so expanded and enforced in an ample volume by Chillingworth, THE BIBLE, THE BIBLE, IS THE RELIGION OF PROTESTANTS.

But facts do not always correspond with our prejudices and presumptions. And there appears to be a strange tendency in mankind to pay to a second-rate authority that deference which is due only to what they acknowledge to be of the first; like travellers, loitering on a road, or striking out of it, to gaze at a directing post, instead of going, though on a sure pathway, right on. Hence, their subjection to Misnas, Vedants, Expositions of Doctors, Creeds, and Articles of Faith. Hence, at the Reformation in England, the avowal and disavowal of the same principles with almost the same breath. In separating from the Romish Church, men asserted the right of private judgment in matters of religion; but, on combining immediately into new societies, they ruined their own cause, by harassing their churches and Universities with the same weapons, with which Catholic opponents had harassed their own party before. Here, men otherwise judicious, betrayed some want of judgment, as in a subsequent period Bishop Bossuet did his consummate skill: for in a Conference, which as advocate for the Romish Church he had with Mons. Claude, the head of the French Protestants, he defeated that honest, but unguarded, disputant with his own arguments; so that the best defence which his memorialist and admirer can make for Claude, is, to repeat what Bossuet said of him, "that Mons. Claude said the most and best that could be said for a bad cause*." Hence the French Catholics used to call the Protestants, the Pretended Reformed.

The Catholics, it appears, charged (as Bellarmine most pointedly charges†) the motley brood of opinions, those terrible heresies, which sprang up with the Reformers, to their doctrines, to casting off the Infallibility of the Roman Pontiff: and, by way of parrying this thrust, the latter hit on the silly expedient, by Harmonies and Confessions, drawn up in their Synods, to hold out an Infallibility of their own.

A most intelligent writer, formerly a member of Oatharine Hall, Mr. Archdeacon Blackburne, has given a View of the Rise, Progress, and Effects of Established Confessions of Faith in Protestant Churches, proving them to be a most serious encroachment on religious liberty, and altogether indefensible on truly Protestant principles. The learned Archdeacon pointed his arguments against the subscriptions imposed on the Clergy of the Established Church; but they will also apply to those on the members of the University, and with more force, and in a greater variety of particulars. For not only had a Statute of Elizabeth‡ laid down, that "no person should in any Sermon, in handling any Common-Places, in Public Readings, or in any other public manner, within our University, teach, or treat of, or defend, any thing, against the religion, or any part of it, received and established in our kingdom by public authority; nor any thing contrary to any state, authority, dignity, or degree, ecclesiastical or civil, of this our kingdom of England or Ireland ;” but this was afterwards followed up by the Regiæ Literæ of James *, in which his Majesty signified his pleasure, that he would have all that take any Degree in the Schools to subscribe to three Articles (which shall be given presently) : suffice it now to say, they include not only “ the oath of allegiance, and of the King’s supremacy as well in spiritual or ecclesiastical things or causes, as temporal, &c.” but to the Common Prayer, “ that it containeth nothing contrary to the word of God,” and to all the 39 Articles, besides the Ratification, fixing them to one settled, literal, grammatical sense. . Now, it might be observed, that neither the above Statute of Elizabeth, given in 1570, nor King James’s Letters, first sent in 1603, and delivered with his own hand in 1616, appear to have been confirmed by Act of Parliament (as most of our Charters are, and as Elizabeth’s first Charter, given 1561, certainly was); and, further, that both King Edward’s and Queen Elizabeth’s first Statutes were of a far more Protestant character than Elizabeth’s last.

I have said, that the Statutes and Letters affect the members of the University in a greater variety of particulars, than they did the clergy, in their ecclesiastical subscriptions. And this is true, so far as the law goes; for by an act passed in Elizabeth’s reign, and never repealed, no other subscription was required, than to those articles “ which concern the Confession of the true Christian Faith, and the Doctrine of the Sacraments.” The Disciplinary Articles, as they are called, made no part of the Act, as may be seen at large in the Journal of Queen Elizabeth’s Parliament, as published by one of our Cambridge Antiquaries †.

At present, it is more to the purpose of our argument to observe, that the above Statute and Royal Letters, or Orders, suppose the members of the University to have a thorough knowledge of all things contained in the Liturgy, the 39 Articles, Homilies, and Canons of the Church; and a hearty approbation of them; and, that these 39 Articles present the outline or summary of what is called a Body of Divinity, according to the Faith of the compilers, on, what are supposed to be, all the leading doctrines of Religion, both natural and revealed; of a prescribed Formulary of Church Discipline, and of various points of Christian Antiquities; all strict as to doctrines; numerous and minute as to particulars; extensive, as well as complicated, in their views; and authoritative as to their obligation. These, of course, will influence our College Lectures, direct our University Sermons, become the subject for academical Exercises, controul our public Schools, and give rule and law to our Divinity Professors.

Hæ tibi erunt Artes—

Within limits so extensive, yet so narrow; so sanctioned, yet so doubtful; so solemn, yet, perhaps, so erroneous; are our religious inquiries circumscribed by these Statutes and Regiæ Literæ. What is this but locking up all our powers for a rational inquiry into matters of religion; and shackling every thing that deserves the name of Theological Literature?

Here, then, we have an enormous power, which, were I speaking of Church matters, I should say, sitteth in the temple of God, speaking and acting, as though it were God; but, treating of academical subjects only, I must beg leave to say, it sitteth in the Schools, speaking and acting as the oracle of all metaphysical and theological truth—to the destruction of the great leading Protestant principle, the right of private judgment in interpreting scripture—to the confusion of all proceedings in the Divinity-Schools—to the contradiction of its own Decrees—to the perplexity and dismay of thinking, conscientious members of the University, who may be students in Theology—to the destruction of the Protestant principle of the right of private judgment—as might be shewn in the famous example produced in Dr. Jebb's Works *, of Mr. Robert Tyrwhitt, of Jesus College. The learned gentleman proposed four theological questions, which (on the Protestant principle of the right of private judgment) he proposed to bring to the test of Scripture. But the learned Professor (Dr. Rutherford) refused to admit the questions into the Schools; no doubt, because he thought they were not quite agreeable to the 39 Articles—to the confusion of all proceedings in the Divinity Schools, and in contradiction of its own Decrees—as in an act, kept by Dr. Milner, on Justification by Faith, in which Dr. Coulthurst was an opponent. Now, if the thesis of the former of these learned gentlemen was agreeable to the Articles, the latter, in his opponency, must have gone contrary to them. If the opponency agreed with the Articles, the Thesis† must have been contrary to them; and either way there must have been a violation both of Queen Elizabeth's Statute and King James's Regiæ Literæ—to the perplexity and dismay of thinking, conscientious members of the University, who may be students in theology—as will be found exemplified in a Sermon, preached in Trinity College by Mr. Garnham, formerly a senior Fellow of that society. The learned gentleman prefixed to his Sermon, when published, "part of the oath taken by every Fellow upon his admission:" this, in reference to the study of the Scriptures, and to the conduct to be pursued by the Fellows in opposing errors, is perfectly consistent with the leading Protestant principle already mentioned. He then makes an extract from the University Statute, de Concionibus, (the statute which I have already referred to) in a way of comparison; and this University Statute he shews is toto cœlo in opposition to the College-Statute, though both were given by the same authority, Queen Elizabeth. Mr. Garnham then puts several pertinent questions, shewing, that the College-Statute and University-Statute are in diametrical opposition to each other; that the members of the University are in the habit of violating the University Statute daily in the Divinity Schools; that the theological disputations, therefore, are, on the principles of that statute, nugatory with respect to the advancement of truth; that, whichever side has the advantage in the Schools, yet out of them, opinions and systems must continue statu quo; and, that it is tantalizing and insulting to insist on such discussions*.

Theology, in her Sermons, preached in our University pulpits, and in various publications from the press, has, indeed, frequently asserted her freedom; and, sometimes, her right to be free, by appealing to a certain Royal Declaration, published with the 39 Articles in a later period; but how ineffectually is fully shewn by Archdeacon Blackburne†. She is still bound to subscribe these Articles in their original, literal, and grammatical sense. It would be easy to shew, by proofs‡ drawn from Sermons,

* A Sermon preached in Trinity College Chapel, Cambridge, on Thursday, Dec. 19th, 1793, the Day appointed for the Commemoration of the Benefactors of that Society.

‡ Instead of such proofs, I shall content myself with appealing to the testimony of four writers of very different sentiments, three of whom were members of our University of Cambridge—Mr. Collins (a private gentleman), one who was called a Freethinker, in a Discourse on Freethinking, from notes in Bibles printed in Elizabeth's reign, from the sense given to the doctrines of the Church of England, by the suffrage of Divines at the Synod of Dort, as well as from the writings of the compilers of the 39 Articles, what the original sense of those Articles most certainly was upon what are called the five points; and then in succession it could no less easily be shewn, that our public preaching in the University pulpits was for a series of years in a strain very little allied to them.

Hence it was, that a zealous party, which proceeded from the University of Oxford, in the middle of the last century (Mr. Whitfield and others) used to make their constant appeal to the doctrinal Articles of the Church, on Justification, Predestination, and such-like: and, though it was supposed, that some of these gentlemen were no hearty friends to the disciplinarian Articles, yet they became ministers of the established church, and under protection of the doctrinal Articles, they conducted themselves like men, who think themselves surrounded by an impregnable fortification*.

But truth being founded in nature, will stand, like a rock, independently of human authority; opinion, resting on fallible judgment, however propped, is liable to give way, and,

At a period a little subsequent to the above, certain students were expelled from Oxford, on account of their conduct, as what were called, Methodists. The author of Pietas Oxoniensis, and others, who appeared as vindicators of the expelled Students, made very ample references to these Doctrinal Articles; and one or more of those Oxford Students were afterwards ordained ministers in the Established Church.

as is said of the fabulous tree of Java, to breathe poison and death while it stands.

Human formularies, therefore, on men of genius are impertinent check-strings, causing them to stop, when they ought to proceed; to be cautious, where they should be resolute; timid, where they ought to be firm; slothful, where they should be industrious; and, even when they make discoveries, backward and procrastinating in communicating them: to men, of very moderate abilities, and shallow, superficial arguments, they give a dangerous confidence, a popular boldness, an oracular power of appeal, an authoritative tone of decision; and men of weak capacities, and humble attainments, they keep in their state of infancy, and hold in leading-strings, all their days.

Such is the nature, such sad experience has proved it to be, of our Corpus Confessionums, our human Formularies of Faith in Protestant Communities. Men seem to have thought, that human opinions rise in value, for a succession of two or three centuries, as figures increase in value, ten times backwards towards the left hand. Whereas the contrary ratio is, in numerous cases, and for obvious reasons, found to be the true one.—With respect to our Divinity Schools, at Cambridge, we may take the rationale of them pretty correctly. The late learned Professor, Dr. Watson, published six volumes of Theological Tracts, prefixed to which will be found a List of Questions proposed in the Schools through a series of years in the Divinity Schools, viz. during the Professorships of Dr. Rutherford, of himself, and, at a much earlier period, of Dr. Tuckney. It will, on all hands, I apprehend, be allowed, that while Bishop Watson was engaged in the duties of his office, he discharged them with as much liberality as discernment; and in the selection of his Tracts he has displayed the same liberality. This spirit may be seen in his distinguishing the Questions of Dr. Tuckney, (who was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity) above those of others, who had been Divinity Professors, in the intermediate time, between Dr. Tuckney and Dr. Rutherford. It is no less visible, from his inserting, among his Tracts, some of Dr. Clarke's, and several written by Protestant Dissenters, Dr. Taylor, Dr. Priestley, and others: but would Bishop Watson, or, circumstanced as he was, could he, or, as some might ask, being bound by his own subscriptions to Queen Elizabeth's Statute, and King James's Letters, ought he, to have admitted questions vindicatory of Dr. Clarke's "Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity," of Dr. Taylor's "View of Original Sin," or of certain of Dr. Priestley's Polemical Writings? It is evident, I think, that the learned Professor, however liberal-minded, would not: it is evident, also, that the above-mentioned questions do also, in some sort, actually consider the Established Formulary as the Ruling Star of our Divinity-Schools; and, that where they do not point directly to it, the variations are but small.

It will be recollected by some, that this learned Professor, when officiating as Moderator in the Divinity-Schools, used sometimes to hold out in his hand a Greek Testament, intimating, at the same time, that to be the rule, which the disputants should regard in their arguments, and himself, in his decision; and this, as if he should say,—though he did not so express himself—"in defiance of the 59 Articles." This was done with his accustomed dignity (for he was well-instructed in the Protestant Doctrine of the Right of Private Judgment, though he had not learned it from Elizabeth's Statutes, or James's Letters), and not in the facetious, ironical spirit of Father Fulgentio. This preacher was once addressing a Popish assembly at Venice, on Pilate's question, "What is Truth?" When, holding out to them a New Testament, he informed them, that after much investigation, he had discovered it; and looked, as though intending to present it to them: then closing the book, and putting it into his pocket, he archly continued, "but the book is prohibited." Now, to present men with a book, and to oblige them at the same time to receive a given interpretation of it (as was done towards Churches and Universities at the Reformation, and still is), to the extent of these 39 Articles—this is little different from locking up the sense of it; for it precludes the free use of it, and prevents an unbiassed examination of its contents. All the Vindications of Subscription, and grave Sermons, united, of Drs. Rutherford, Powel, Halifax, and Hey, cannot furnish an answer to Father Fulgentio's honest irony.

3. Having thus considered, in a general way, the influence of our Statutes, Royal Letters, &c. on Criticism, and Theological Literature, let us,—to put the matter in the most striking point of view—add a few words on the Nature and Extent of our Subscriptions, together with the testimonies of several learned men, members of our University, against them.

An extract from Queen Elizabeth's Statute has been already given, and an allusion also made to King James's three darling Articles, as he used to call them. As, over and above an obligation to obey University and College-Statutes, the members of our University are also bound to receive the above Articles, as the rule of their faith and practice, it may not be improper to give them here at full length. They read, as follows:

“ I. That the King's Majesty under God is the only supreme Governor of the Realms; and all other his Highness's dominions and countries, as well in spiritual as ecclesiastical things or causes, as temporal, and that no foreign prince, person, prelate, or potentate, hath, or ought to have, any jurisdiction, ecclesiastical or spiritual, within his Majesty's said realms, dominions, and countries.

“ II. That the Book of Common Prayer, and of Ordering of Bishops, containeth nothing in it contrary to the Word of God; and that it may lawfully be used; and that he himself will use the form in the said book prescribed, in public prayer, and administration of the Sacraments, and no other.

“ III. That he alloweth the Book of Articles, agreed upon by the Archbishops, and Bishops of both provinces, and the whole Clergy in Convocation holden at London in 1562, and that he acknowledgeth all and every of the Articles therein contained (being in number 39, besides the Ratification) to be agreeable to the word of God.

“ We, whose names are underwritten, do willingly, and ex animo, subscribe to the 3 Articles above-mentioned, and to all things therein contained *.”

One or two brief remarks should be made here.

By a Grace, then, which passed the Senate Jan. 2, 1613, it was ordered (juxta tenorem literarum a serenissimo Rege Jacobo missarum) that no one should have a Grace passed, for the Degrees of Bachelor in Theology, or Doctor in any Faculty, till he had subscribed James's three Articles. But James afterwards so narrowed this Grace, as, it should seem, to supersede it, and to place in its room his own Royal Order of Dec. 12, 1616, which, among other things, runs thus—“ that his Majesty signified his pleasure, that he would have all that take any Degree in Schools to subscribe to the three Articles,” quoted above.

It seems, as though James, wished to have it understood, that he behaved towards the University with great liberality and condescension in this business; and the Bishop of Winchester, with King James's Order, sent the following strange Letter to Dr. Hill, Master of Catharine Hall, who was the Vice-Chancellor that year.

“ Good Mr. Vice-Chancellor,

“ I have sent you his Majesty's hand to his own direction: I think you have no precedent, that ever a King first with his own mouth, then with his own hand, gave such directions ; and, therefore, you shall do very well to keep the writing curiously, and their directions religiously, and to give his Majesty a good account of 'em carefully; which I pray God you may: and so, with my love to yourself and the rest of the heads, I commit you to God.

“ From the Court, the 12th Dec. 1616.”

Such, then, is the theory, according to King James's three darling Articles, of Subscription ; and both of the theory and practice an account is given in another part of this work: it is unnecessary to treat of them further here. The truth is, the few pages now remaining to the end of this Dissertation have been lying blank for a considerable time, during which, what was intended to be stated here, has been treated of in another place. The testimonies of learned Academics against the system are also there given. The few following pages, therefore, shall be filled up with other matters.

After so much, elsewhere advanced, concerning spurious charters, a desire was felt to pursue the same course relative to them, as will be found to be adopted towards some other subjects, which concern our Universities: this was, to introduce the testimonies of learned men on these points, so that some opinions, which have been advanced, might appear to flow in the natural order of facts, and to rest not on private, prejudiced, and doubtful allegations, but on public, unsuspected testimonies, on well-established, substantial authorities ; for, I am aware, it may startle some people, not accustomed to this sort of inquiry, to read, that charters and other public instruments, which could confer the most powerful privileges, give the most extravagant exemptions, and convey the most extensive possessions, were many of them gross forgeries. Certain, however, it is, that the forging of charters was so common a practice, from the sixth to the eleventh century, and even later, that it may almost be said to have been a profession.

And, indeed, antiquity itself, notwithstanding its venerable character, is a great deceiver; often, by reason of the mists, through which remote objects are viewed; and as often, by the false lights thrown around them by imposture. Substances the least liable to decay or fade, and the least exposed, one might think, to fraud, have had their falsarii. Hence monuments, seals, medals, and ancient coins, have been falsified in abundance; so that treatises on ancient art can scarcely be said to be complete, that do not furnish the means of distinguishing the true from the false. But paper was a more manageable material; and writing, with those who could write, of easy fabrication. Of the various Greek and Latin writings ascribed to the wrong authors, some, no doubt, have been falsified rather by mistake, than design: but pious fraud and worldly policy have been positive, grand corruptors and impostors; and of false old Testaments, false new Testaments, false apostolical Fathers, and the like, there is no end*.

* Of mistakes or deceptions on the above subjects, ample testimony is borne—on monuments and seals by the Critic on the Parian Chronicle, by Wolfius, and Mr. Knight, in their Prolegomena to Homer;—on classical writers, by Dr. Bentley, in his Dissertation upon Phalaris, 1777;—on coins and medals, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and other nations, &c., by Goriæus, Hoppingius, Mabillon, Anderson, and the author of Disser. de Usu et Præstantia veterum numismatum; Dichiaratione della Hebraica Medaglia detta Maghen David, Abraham, &c. di de Angelo Gabriele Anguissola. Mediol. 1617; and by various writers, among these enumerated, de Scripturibus de Reditibus, &c.; de Nummis, &c., by Fabricius, Bibliogr. Antiq. cap. xvi.—Of supposititious writings ascribed to the patriarchs and prophets, Fabricius enumerates 240; Codex Pseudepigraphus Vet. Test. Collectus a J. A. Fabricio. Hamb. A. 1713. In his Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, he has published a similar collection of supposititious Gospels and Fragments relating to the Gospel History. Of certain supposititious writings, under the title of Patres Apostolici, many authors have written; and more generally, a former librarian of the Bodleian Library (Dr. James) has written much at large, “A Treatise on the Corruption of Scripture, Councils, and Fathers, by the Prelates, Pastors, and Pillars of the Church of Rome: (Oxford, 1688,)”—many of which were before reckoned spurious, and even formally rejected by Cardinal Bellarmine, and Baronius, and other learned men of the Roman Church.

Of books, such as those called classics, it is not pretended, indeed, that we have the autographs of the original authors, but only the apographs. Charters were more liable to mislead; and the manufacture of them was at once more easy and seductive.

Of books, it may be farther observed, that of such as were deemed worthy of being written out, many copies would be taken; so that, if one of them was lost, others of them might be preserved. But charters were rarely duplicates; they were almost always single copies: so that such single copies, as those original charters are supposed to have been, if lost, must have been lost for ever. An intelligent writer, who had well-canvassed writings of this kind, maintains, that all such of the date of our supposed ones, though he was not speaking of them, must have been worn out by the rust of time, or would have been swept away by the devastations made of them by successive conquerors. But, to cut the matter short, with respect to some of our supposed ancient charters, they are of a date, as hinted in another part of this work, prior to the public use of such instruments in this country.

But, passing general observations on fictitious charters and bulls, let us receive the more particular the testimony of learned antiquaries; and first, that of Philip Labbe, an erudite and industrious inquirer into ecclesiastical writings, and ancient charters, of the authenticity of some of which (he exemplifies by those of France,) he expresses his strong suspicions, of others he asserts, that they were undoubtedly forged. One is ascribed to King Clovis conveying lands in Burgundy, before he possessed that kingdom*; in another, Ostregesillus professes himself bishop of a large province in Gaul (that of the Bituriges†), a hundred years before his consecration; and one is given to Clovis, dated thirteen years after his death*. These, and various other examples of charters, undoubtedly fictitious, are produced by the learned Jesuit, Philippe Labbe.

The next authority I shall cite is that of Mabillon, who published a work of much research and great celebrity, de Re Diplomaticâ. The professed aim of this work, as he avows in the opening of it, is to lay down certain and accurate conditions and rules, by which legitimate instruments may be discerned from spurious ones, and those that are certain and genuine from such as are uncertain and of doubtful authority, atque ita ut muniat viam contra falsariorum imposturas; and he admits that, during many ages, there were not wanting forgers, by whom spurious diplomas were manufactured so as to imitate true ones†; and he admits that these falsatores lived from the sixth up to the eleventh century.

Another learned Jesuit follows in the same track, but extends his views still further. He compliments both the fidelity and learning of Mabillon, but thinks that many even of those charters and bulls, which Mabillon supposed to be genuine, were false: he maintains, as Mabillon had before, that forging charters was a common practice in the sixth, seventh, eighth, and the following centuries, up to the eleventh, and that all ascribed to the Merovingian and Carlovingian line of the French kings are forgeries. He produces various charters, on which he founded his arguments; and I am not aware that Mabillon ever attempted to answer them‡.

It may be observed, in passing, of the University of Paris, that it is probably of an earlier date than that of Cambridge; and yet it does not pretend to carry its charters of Privileges and Bulls so high. Monsieur Crevier, whom we have frequent occasion to cite elsewhere, knew no laws more ancient, relative to the scholastic discipline, than those of London in 1138, a decretal of Alexander the Third, and a decree of the Council of Lateran, under the same Pope in 1179, and of public instruments, relative to its rectorship (which is tantamount to the existence of a university), he observes—"D'ailleurs le titre, sur le quelle on fonde le prétendut rectorat de Jean Scot Erigené, est bien caduc, et la Bulle de Nicolas I. est légitimement suspectée de fausité *.

It may be noticed, also, of the University of Oxford, that, though it has no fundatorial false charters, yet it contains one, among the archives in their Tower, against their Privileges†; and a writer referred to in another place has proved by unanswerable arguments, that several charters and deeds, or grants, of a later date, relating to University College, are the grossest fabrications‡.

Of charters undoubtedly, spurious and forged, several English and Scottish writers have given abundant proofs. Among others, Mr. James Anderson, author of a work which obtained for him a great name among his countrymen, and Mr. Ruddiman, who wrote an elaborate preface to it, have treated much at large both on charters and seals. The use of charters and seals, it appears, is of a date somewhat later in Scotland than in England. But one, at least, of the earliest of them is supposed by Sir John Dalrymple, a great authority on Scottish antiquities, and by Dr. Hickes, not to be genuine; and Anderson and Ruddiman both refer to public instruments, which are proved to be forgeries. After various observations on charters and seals, Ruddiman, in his Preface, p. 103§, adds, "It remains to add somewhat concerning the different frauds committed by forgers upon seals as well as charters. The industrious Heineccius remarks, that there were six ways whereby a forgery or mistake may be committed in these, and illustrates them by examples.* He proceeds to quote Heineccius.

Finally, among English writers on this subject, Dr. George Hickes stands pre-eminent, as well for his great learning, as his acknowledged accuracy and fidelity. He clearly perceived, that charters, for which such high antiquity is claimed, with the seals annexed to them, were forgeries; he traces the origin of charters and seals; he lays down marks, by which genuine and original ones may be known, and false ones detected; and he shews, with the other learned men above-mentioned, that the practice of forging charters and seals was a practice of the sixth up to the eleventh century: and of such-like false instruments he gives ample proof†.—Whether these writers bring any of their examples from Cambridge History, is of no consequence. It may, however, be remarked, that the dates of our supposed ancient charters, and the time when they were probably fabricated, fall within that period, when forging charters and bulls, and other grants, is allowed to have been so commonly practised, as perhaps, scarcely, considered a crime†.

And here, the blank pages being nearly filled, the Dissertation must close. It must suffice to have stated facts, and to have appealed to the authority of the above writers. In them may be found every thing that is necessary for the purpose of illustrating this subject; and it would be out of place to go into particulars here: generally, however, we may remark, that counterfeit charters, bulls, with seals, and other instruments, owe much of their origin—to the ignorance of the dark ages, when few but clerks could read or write,—sometimes, perhaps, to a supposed existence of prior, real grants—to the confusion into which property was thrown, and the havoc that was made of all authentic documents, during the wars of the Saxons, Danes, and Normans—to a suspicion of future claimants, accompanied with a belief, (agreeably to the doctrine, that, Dominion was founded in grace) that too much could not be claimed for God and the church. The lay-abbots, no doubt, had a share in these frauds; but monks and priests were the principal movers in them.

Germon, the Jesuit, author of an able work, referred to above*, introduces it, by observing, “that had he thought the publishing of it could have any way proved injurious to the churches and monasteries, whose ancient instruments he had examined, he would have foreborne the publication:” but adds, “it is of no consequence, or very little, to the churches and monasteries, whether, after so long a series of years, their more ancient instruments are true or false.” A remark similar to this I have made elsewhere, relative to the more ancient charters copied from the archives of the University of Cambridge: antiquaries may, in their fondness, make them the ground of their disputes, and historians, if they please, take from them something to give colour and strength to their narratives. But, it is evident, they can answer no purposes in real business, and will have little or no authority, in settling any disputed claim. Whether true or false, they have answered all their purposes, by serving as stepping-stones to the present Privileges of our University.

These Privileges are now held not by doubtful charters and musty bulls, but by the sanction of the English Legislature. The British Parliament, therefore, is become a guarantee, to secure them in all their legitimate, constitutional privileges, (still, however, with reserve for its supreme legislative authority) while yet retaining the higher character of, Protector of the liberties of the nation. This is the strongest argument which, in a constitutional point of view, can be brought for the legislative interference in the abolition of our subscriptions to the 39 Articles, which by many liberal and good men has been reckoned (as already urged) to be a dreadful tax on the morality, religion, and liberty of the country, and, at the same time, the most serious invasion ever made, though by royal authority, on the Privileges of the University.

I shall close with notifying to my readers, that in 1812 I published Four Letters on the English Constitution; and I perceive the venerable Major Cartwright * has done me the honour to oppose one or two points advanced in them. These I may consider at my leisure, though, perhaps, I may not think so highly of some things in the English Constitution, as the Major. But be this as it may, those Letters were written as a pledge to certain friends, that, in the Privileges of the University of Cambridge I did not intend to act inconsistently with the principles advocated in my Inquiry into the Nature of Subscription, in Reference to the natural Rights of Mankind, the Powers of the human Mind, the Doctrines and Precepts of Christianity, and the Principles of the British Constitution, first printed in 1789; and I hope it will be found that I have endeavoured to redeem the pledge.

P. S. I have said elsewhere, that I might, perhaps, say something (omitted in its proper place) on another of our ancient Bulls; but having lost certain memoranda, and being now employed on other subjects, I shall be easily forgiven, if I have taken my leave of such matters.

Dr. Buchanan's Eastern MSS. are classed generally thus :

I. Hebrew MSS.—Pentateuch,—Esther,—Gad,—Ahasuerus,—New Testament,—Acts and Epistles,—Rabbinical Books.

II. Syriac MSS.—1. Old and New Testament,—2. Pentateuch,—3. Historical Books,—4. Prophetical Books,—5. Apocryphal Books,—6. Gospels,—7. Acts and Epistles,—8. Psalters,—9. Liturgies,—10. Miscellaneous.

III. Æthiopic MSS.—St. John's Gospel.

IV. Chinese Persian MSS.—Official Letters.

V. English Letter to Sir W. Jones; from Ezra Styles, President of Yale College, in America. Dated Jan. 18, 1794. Received by the Society, after the death of Sir Wil. Jones. Fol. 148 pages. Bound in Russia. In the title-page is written, not published. The subject is the Indian Chronology and Mythology.

More particularly, Dr. Buchanan's MSS. are, as follows, 1809 :

1. Pentateuchus Heb. Class Oo. i. 3.—This MS. on a roll of goat-skin, dyed red, was found in the Record Chest of the Black Jews, in the interior of Malayala, in India, in the year 1806; of which a more particular account will be found in the following pages—587, 588, 589, 590.

2. Megillath Esther. Class Oo. i. 4. A fine MS. Roll of the Book of Esther, brought also from one of the Synagogues of the Black Jews in India. It is a vellum roll, covered on the back with silk, and mounted with a roller. It has the same peculiarities as the former, but has not been collated (1809).

3. Megillath Esther. Oo. i. 5. A small parchment roll, containing 26 columns in squares of a hand's breadth, modern, yet written without points. It however retains the Masoretical distinctions which are in the above-noticed roll.

Words of Gad the Seer. Cl. Oo. i. 20., or Book of Gad the Prophet, a paper Book in 4to. and is only a transcript, written probably for private use. This also was obtained from the Black Jews in India, written in 1771. <sup>1</sup>

4. Megillah Ahasuerosh. Oo. i. 20., or the Roll of Ahasuerus, and is found to be no other than the Book of Esther; or that part at least inserted in the Apocrypha. In the English version this book is prefaced in the following manner: This is the book of Esther, at least that part of the book, that is inserted in the Apocrypha. The rest of the chapters of the Book of Esther which are found neither in the Hebrew nor in the Chaldee.

5. Novum Testamentum Hebræum. Oo. i. 32. A paper Book, small 4to. written in the Rabbinical character. It contains all the Books excepting the Revelations. It is a version in the Chaldaico-Hebrew dialect, and said to have been made by some Chaldaic Jew, to whom the Syriac text of the N. Test. was known, but neither the person, place, nor time, is expressed in this copy. The much-disputed text of 1 John, v. 7, is found in it.

Acta Apostolorum, or Epist. Heb. Oo. i. 16. A large 4to. Vol. written in the square Hebrew character, containing the Acts, Epistle to the Romans, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Galatians, and Ephesians; also the Revelation of St. John, in the Rabbinical character.

Seder Tephilloth, Ordo Precum, or Hebrew Liturgy. It is imperfect; obtained from the Black Jews in India. Class, No. 42.

Parashath Beresheith, No. 35. A Commentary on the Book of Genesis, small 4to. perfect, no date, in Rabbinical character.

Orach Haiim; Semita Vitæ. A Treatise of Practical Rules, according to the Jewish Institution, 4to. Rabbinical character. N. 30.

Halchoth Haiim; Regulæ Vitæ. A Treatise of Rules according to the Jewish Institution, 4to, Imperfect. N. 33.

Likute Joseph; Collectanea Josephi, or Selections from the Talmud.

Joreh Daah, &c. N. 38. Containing directions about slaying and slaughtering of Beasts.

Sepher Machalthoth; Relatio Somniorum. This is a book bound up with N. 20, and is a Hebrew Translation, made by a learned Jew in India, of a Dream written by a learned Christian in London, containing a prophecy of the events to happen to Europe, which he characterizes by the name Babylon.

Liber Cabalisticus, tractans de Nominibus Divinis; written beautifully in the Rabbinical character; an Indian copy. N. 24.

Sepher Ginnath Eguz; Liber Cabalisticus: treating on the divine names. By Rabbi Joseph Gecalilia. Beautifully written in the Epistolary Rabbinical character.

Historia Judaica. Written in Rabbinical Hebrew; but it is not clear to what part of the Jewish history it relates. N. 37. In the Epistolary Rabbinical character.

N. B. Many Hebrew printed books were given by Dr. Buchanan.

BUCHANAN EASTERN MSS.

THE above list having been given in the 36th number of the Classical Journal, it has been here reprinted, with corrections and additions. Before I proceed to Dr. B.'s other Eastern MSS. I beg leave to make a short pause, in order to give a more particular description of a Hebrew Manuscript of Dr. Buchanan's already noticed, and barely noticed: but it is one so curious in itself, so valuable for its beautiful characters and for its supposed antiquity, and of such importance to biblical critics, that we shall transgress our usual rule, which is, in general, to give little more than the title of the manuscript. The title of the manuscript now alluded to, as already given, is, an Indian copy of the Hebrew Pentateuch*.

It is thus entitled, in a prefixed label: "This manuscript, on a roll of goatskin dyed red, was found in the record chest of one of the Black Jews, in the interior of Malayala in India, by the Rev. Claudius Buchanan, in the year 1806." It does not appear, however, that the Jews, from whom it was obtained, could give any satisfactory account of it: whence, therefore, it was actually derived, and its particular age (for many reasons) cannot be positively ascertained, and must be left, in a great measure, to inferences, probabilities and conjecture. We are not, therefore, to be surprised, that the gentleman, who made the collation of this most singular manuscript with Vander Hooght's and Athias's Bibles, whatever opinion he might entertain of the original MS., from which it might be derived, is cautious of giving an opinion of the age of this copy.

On perusing the most ancient Greek manuscripts known (the Codex Bezae, for example, in the University Library of Cambridge, the Alexandrine in the British Museum, and the Acta Apostolorum, in the Bodleian†) and the most ancient Hebrew manuscripts, in the Oxford and Cambridge Libraries, and comparing them together, their relative antiquity may, in some measure, be judged of, by the state of the vellum and of the letters with respect to each other, and that the former must be more ancient than the latter by several centuries. But there is less difficulty in fixing the age of Greek manuscripts than of Hebrew, for the following reasons. It is known, by inscriptions*, that the most ancient Greek manuscripts must have been in the square character (or Uncial, as they are called) and the progress may be gradually traced from the Uncial to that of the smaller size. Add to this, that a few years later there are Greek manuscripts with a specific date, and by these the ages of others may be pretty correctly ascertained. So that though the very best critics may, perhaps, be mistaken by a century or two, in giving their opinion as to the precise age of the most ancient Greek manuscripts (and they have given different opinions), yet, in following the rules laid down by Montfaucon, they would probably not go very wide from the truth.—Vid. Montfaucon's Palæographia Græca.

But the age of Hebrew manuscripts cannot be ascertained by these rules. They are written in a large unabbreviated character, (I am not speaking of the Rabbinical Hebrew) and they are all, (I am speaking of the most ancient manuscripts) without dates. Dr. Kennicott supposes, that the oldest Hebrew manuscript is not beyond the age of 800 or 900 years. See his Dissert. Generalis.

All that can be ascertained of Hebrew manuscripts, is, Whether they are written in a character more or less square, (according to the Spanish, Italian, or German mode of writing)†; Whether they have, or not, the points and accents, &c. and the marginal notes called keri; Whether or not they are written in columns, with all the spaces and other peculiarities of the most authorized copies; and whether the skins are ornamented, or not, with the coronæ at the top of some of the letters;—and in short, Whether they have, or not, the undoubted evidence of their being derived from ancient synagogue copies: for this is the criterion by which the Jews are directed in estimating the value of the Hebrew manuscripts of the Old Testament. But with respect to the precise antiquity of particular copies, they do not seem to possess any precise rules by which they can form their judgment: and to what they call private copies, being in the quadrated form, they pay little regard.

* Antiq. Asiaticæ Christianam Æram Antecedentes, &c. per Edmundum Chishull

As to the present Hebrew roll, it unquestionably possesses all those marks of peculiarity, correctness, and surprising minuteness, which, in the estimation of a Jew, constitutes the prime excellence, and stamps the value of a synagogue copy. It has some marks of antiquity; but there is room for doubting, whether it is so old as some have been inclined to believe it; I mean more particularly the late collator. It is, however, accompanied with this additional circumstance, which will give it consequence among many persons. Dr. Kennicott observes, "It is certain, that almost all the Western Hebrew manuscripts of the Old Testament, which are known at present, were written between the years 1000 and 1457; which makes it probable, that all the manuscripts written before the periods 700 or 800, were destroyed by some decree of the Jewish Senate, on account of their many differences, then declared genuine."

This latter opinion seems very improbable, and is denied by many of the more learned Jews; though I shall not examine it now, nor some others delivered by Dr. Kennicott. But as this learned writer, and many others, have expressed an earnest wish, (thinking it of consequence to compare the Oriental with the western copies) that copies of the Hebrew Scriptures among the Indian and Chinese Jews could be procured, (who had carried on no intercourse with the western) this being the case, the present supposed Oriental manuscript, it is presumed, cannot at least fail of being considered a treasure by them—if, at least, they consider it as that great desideratum; and if, according to the present collator, it differs in nothing material from the western copies, whether Jewish or Christian.

But our present business is not so much with criticism as with statement: we shall, therefore, hold to our readers the balance, as it were, of opinions, by presenting them with a copy of a note, from the Rev. Dr. Marsh, Bishop of Peterborough, Lady Margaret's Professor, to the Collator, Mr. Yeates*.

“A manuscript roll of the Hebrew Pentateuch, apparently of some antiquity, and found among the black Jews in the interior of India, must be regarded at least as a literary curiosity, deserving the attention of the learned in general. And, as this manuscript appears, on comparison, to have no important deviation from our common printed Hebrew text, it is of still greater value to a theologian, as it affords an additional argument for the integrity of the Pentateuch. The Hebrew manuscripts of the Pentateuch preserved in the West of Europe, though equally derived, with the Hebrew manuscripts preserved in India, from autographs of Moses, must have descended from it through very different channels; and, therefore, the close agreement of the former with the latter is a proof, that they have preserved the original text in great purity, since the circumstances, under which the manuscript was found, forbid the explanation of that agreement on the principle of any immediate connexion. It is true, that as this manuscript (or rather the three fragments of which this manuscript is composed) was probably written much later than the time when the Masoretic text was established by the learned Jews of Tiberias, it may have been wholly derived from that Masoretic text; and in this case it would only afford an argument, that the Maso-retic text had preserved its integrity, and would not affect the question, whether the Masoretic text itself were an accurate representative of the Mosaic autograph.

“ But, on the other hand, as the peculiar circumstances, under which the manuscript was found, render it at least possible, that the influence of the Masora, which was extended to the African and European manuscripts by the settlement of the most distinguished Oriental Jews in Africa and Spain, never reached the mountainous districts in the South of India; as it is possible that the manuscript in question was derived from manuscripts anterior to the establishment of the Masora; manuscripts even, which might have regulated the learned Jews of Tiberias in the formation of their own text; the manuscript appears, for these reasons, to merit particular attention. A description and collation of it, therefore, must certainly interest every Biblical critic.

HERBERT MARSH.”

Thus far on this Indian manuscript of the Hebrew Pentateuch.

We proceed to the Syriac manuscripts, given by Dr. Buchanan, Class Oo.

1. A Bible that contains the Old and New Testaments, together with the Apocrypha, and fragments of the books of Clemens. It is in what is called the Estrangelo (that is, a text written in cap. letters) character, in 2 vols. fol. No. 1, 2. Supposed to be the second copy of the ancient Syriac known in Europe. The first is just noticed by Montfaucon: he saw it in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. Diarium Italic. ch. 2, p. 11. Waltoni Prolegomena; xiii. §. xvii. This MS. is, therefore, deemed very curious and valuable. It was found in one of the churches of the Syrian Christians. The Epistles of Clemens were divided into eight Books, though the sixth contained only Fragments:

the seventh is lost, as also is Book eighth. It is said to have been given by the patriarch of Antioch, of a former period, to an Indian church. A more critical account of this is given than of any other. There are drawings prefixed to the books: to the books of Clemens is a drawing, wherein is written, St. Clemens, disciple of St. Peter, with a book in his hand.

2. The Pentateuch; folio, in a large Estrangelo character. No. 8.

3. The Pentateuch; a Nestorian copy, in small quarto. No. 26.

4. The Pentateuch; a Nestorian copy, in small quarto. No. 27.

5. Lib. Hist. Vet. Test. No. 10. Nestorian copy; containing Judges, Samuel, Kings, 1, 2. Proverbs, The Wisdom of Jesus, the Son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus, Book of Ecclesiastes, Ruth, Song of Solomon, and Job, in small quarto. No. 10.

6. Lib. Hist. Vet. Test. Esdras, second and third of Maccabees, Esther, Chronicles, Ezra, and Nehemiah, large quarto. No. 14. Written 1734.

7. The major and minor Prophets, in the Estrangelo hand, in folio. No. 7.

8. The major and minor Prophets, The Story of Susanna; a Nestorian copy, in quarto. No. 18.

9. Liber Sapientiae, or Book of the Wisdom of Solomon, 8vo. No. 39; and in the same volume, Liber Sapientiae, Filii Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus.

10. The Four Gospels, with the Acts of the Apostles, in quarto. No. 25.

11. Acta Apostolorum, Catholic Epistles of James, Peter, and John, in quarto. No. 31; and also Paul's Epistles.

12. Acta Apostolorum et Apocalypsis. No. 21.

13. Lectiones ex Novo Testamento. No. 17.

14. Psalterium. No. 22.

ÆTHIOPIC MSS. BUCHANAN.

Evangelium S. Johannis. No. 41. Duodecimo. In a printed note on the cover we read as follows: "This MS. of the Gospel of St. John in the Æthiopic language was found in India by the Rev. Claudius Buchanan, 1807. It was lying in the old library of an Armenian merchant, whose ancestors had lived in Hindostan for upwards of three centuries, and who had transactions with the Christians in Africa." This copy is perfect. Mr. Ley, the present learned Arabic professor, is collating it.

INSCRIPTIONS ON COPPER-PLATES.

Fac-similes of Chinese tablets, and Jewish tablets, eleven in number; and in the same cabinet where the plates are deposited are five Chinese printing blocks, containing, as it is said, a specimen of a Chinese Translation of the New Testament.

IMPERIAL PERSIAN LETTER.

This letter has not yet been translated; but there is a line of explanation at the bottom with Dr. Buchanan's name;—Solyman Aga, envoy from his Highness the Bashaw of Bagdad, to his Excellency the most Noble the Marquis of Wellesley, Governor-General of India, &c. Dated Calcutta, 20th Sept. 1804.

The reader is desired to take notice, that to the end of the account of Dr. Buchanan's Eastern MSS. is to be added another Historia Judaica, which contains the History of the Jews of Malabar, and the Origin of the black and white Jews in India, in 24 chapters: thin octavo, in the Rabbinical character. No. 23.

Add also, Sepher Saphirim, or Origin of the Jews of Malabar, being a Hebrew Translation of the Historical Collections, written in the Portuguese Language, by Order of Abraham Mohens, Governor of Cochin. No. 47.

Kedosheim Malabar, or New Account of the Origin of the Jews of Malabar from the Time of the Destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem.

Chalkoth, N. 45, 4to. imperfect; written in the Rabbinical character.

Anecdotes of Malabar History: translated from the Hebrew, by Mr. Crool, of Cambridge.

P. S. Since communicating the above article to the Classical Journal, I have corrected some errors which occur in that communication, as well as in the other articles, which relate to the Cambridge MSS. and having had the opportunity of a further perusal and consideration of the Goatskin Pentateuch, I beg leave to subjoin a word or two more concerning its antiquity.

On conversing with persons employed in manufacturing goatskins, (the profession is called Spanish leather-dressing) I find the testimony to the goatskins' receiving more deeply the impression of ink, and of retaining its brightness longer, confirmed. This argument, therefore, may be allowed to retain its proportionate weight in favour of a certain degree of antiquity in this Pentateuch. Still it would be hazardous to carry it too far. The oldest MSS. that are known to us (the Beza MS. for example, to mention no others) are either much mutilated, obliterated, or repaired, at least at the beginning, and from an obvious cause. This Pentateuch is clear and complete at the beginning; and its uniform clearness tells more against the extraordinary antiquity of it, than, at least, for it. The Jews have been accustomed to write their law, and other parts of their sacred writings, on rolls from the earliest, even down to modern, times: and there is nothing in the skin itself that should render it more peculiar to one place than another. They might write on a goatskin in Italy, or Germany, or in Spain, or Africa, (for the purpose of duration, or of imitating their ancestors) as well as in any part of the East. The Goat-skin Roll in the British Museum was written in Africa; and it is modern.

While reperusing this Goatskin roll, happening to meet with Mr. Professor Ley, he suggested, that the shape of the letter was perfectly Italian. The Italian Hebrew character was a sort of mixed character; the German inclined; the Spanish was square*: the present type is that of the large quadrated form. I have seen Hebrew MSS. acknowledged for Italian, in the handwriting of the scribe prefixed: the characters were much smaller, but resembled those of this Pentateuch; and its resemblance to the Italian, or, perhaps, Spanish character, is a presumption, I think, that it was written either in Spain or Italy, and not in the East: and, if so, the argument about eastern copies of the Pentateuch must, notwithstanding this goat-skin copy, stand where it did.

That a Pentateuch should be written in Italy, or Spain, or Africa, and found among the Black Jews in India, cannot be considered any thing extraordinary. The roving disposition of the Jews, even for commercial purposes only, is proverbial, from the earliest even to the present time. I have been in company, in London, and very lately, with an eastern Jew, who came from a place near Genesareth, a few miles from that where Christ was born. He was not 30 years of age, and had been in almost every principal town in Europe: and there would be nothing surprising in a Jew's conveying a Pentateuch, or twenty Pentateuches, from Italy or Spain to India.

We have seen that the testimony of the present learned Lady Margaret's Professor, as to the character of this Pentateuch, reaches a bare possibility, and, from his acquaintance with ancient MSS., very cautiously expressed. The probabilities appear to be the other way. On the general expulsion of the Jews from Spain, under Philip, many went to the East—or, finally, if an Hindostan merchant, having transactions in Africa, could obtain thereby an Æthiopic Evan. Johan. (see p. 595) why might not a Jew, a Goatskin Pentateuch, through the same means?

ON THE

CAMBRIDGE.

Communicated by me to the Athenæum, May 1808.

It is the intention of the writer of this paper, occasionally to communicate to the Athenæum brief accounts of some manuscripts in the public libraries of this kingdom. Those will be selected which, by some, are deemed the most curious and valuable: such are, the most ancient Greek manuscripts of some parts of the scriptures; the most ancient Hebrew manuscripts of the Old Testament; and the Latin manuscripts of that curious remnant of antiquity, the Athanasian Creed. The libraries will of course be indicated in which these MSS. are to be found.

I begin with Theodori Bæzæ Codex, or that most famous manuscript presented by Beza to the University of Cambridge. It will be better to preserve the title, Bezæ Codex, than use that of Cantabrigiensis, in order to keep the distinction clear between this codex and the other Codices Cantabrigienses.

This is, perhaps, the most ancient Greek manuscript extant. It was formerly the property, or rather in the possession of, Theodore Beza, the reformer of Geneva, contemporary with Calvin, and editor of a Greek Testament, first published in 1551. It is a Greek copy, with a Latin version, containing the Four Gospels in the order, Matthew, John, Luke, Mark, with the Acts of the Apostles. Beza frequently refers to this MS. in his edition of the New Testament, though he thought it had been a little nibbled at, and corrupted by, the ancient heretics, particularly in the Gospel according to Luke. How or from whom Beza first procured it, he does not say, only that he obtained it from a monastery in Lyons in 1562. He presented it to the University in 1581, accompanied with a handsome complimentary letter, in Latin, prefixed to the MS*.

It is written in uncial letters, that is, large, quadrated letters, which have improperly been called, by some persons, Initials†, for in the times when that MS was written, all Greek letters, both in books and on monuments, were of this cast. The manuscript is mutilated in many leaves, ten of which are supplied by a more modern pen; but, in other respects, it is, in general, in good preservation. The original manuscript whence this was copied was probably written in Egypt; but that is lost: there are many reasons for believing that the present copy was written in the west‡.

By whatever means Beza obtained this invaluable book, he judged most properly in considering it as public property, and he consulted his own fame in assigning it over to the public library of one of the most learned universities in the world. Some are unwilling to charge so religious a man as Beza with plundering a religious house; yet the best critics allow that this business wears a mysterious aspect. Let us hear Greisbach.

Steph. β. seu Codex Bezae, seu Cantabrigiensis, mihi in Evangeliiis et Actis D. Tot tamque notabiles Lectiones, soli Cantabrigiensi peculiares, e suo β protulit Stephanus, ut, me quidem iudice, hic liber ab illo diversus esse prorsus nequit. Nec objici potest, Stephanum innumeras Lectiones Cantabrigienses notatu dignissimas silentio præterivisse, aliasq: a Cantabrigiensibus vel penitus vel aliquantulum discrepantes laudasse: his enim vitis ex aliis quoque libris excerpta laborare, modo vidimus. Fateor, quæ Beza de suo Evangeliorum codice, et de ratione, qua adeptus eum sit, narravit, vix vera esse, si Bezæ Codex unus idemque est cum Stephani β. Sed hoc me, ut sententiam meam abjiciam, minime movet. Quid enim, si Beza, jam grandævus et permultis negotiis et curis distractus, non satis recte meminisset, quonam modo liber ille in suas manus pervenerit, aut quænam is, qui dederat, de eo narraverit? Quid si neminis putavit interesse, totam rem, prout gesta esset, accuratissime rescire? Quid, si certis de causis ambiguitate verborum rem involvere, quam clare eloqui, maluit? Quid si is, e cujus manibus Beza codicem acceperat, retulit relata, quamquam a vero abhorrentia? Aut si Bezæ falsa et repugnantia narrare satius duxit, quam novissima libri fata ingenue profari? Mirum profecto videtur, coenobii Gallicani περιηλιστ in Bezæ possessionem pervenisse; nec quisquam facile dixerit, quonam jure is qui e monastica bibliotheca librum abstulit, sive coenobii incola fuerit sive alienus, Bezæ eum potuerit vendere donove dare*.

But, however Beza came by it, one thing is certain, that the book must have been stolen by somebody; for, in addition to what has been observed by others, it may be noticed, that no papal or regal decree had passed in France to authorize the visitation of monasteries; and that neither Beza nor any other person could act as commissioners to bring away manuscripts, as was done under a special commission from the privy council in England†: consequently no person could have had a right to it; and whoever first took it from the library must have committed a theft.

The above extract was made rather than one from any other writer, as being connected with the passage which affirms the Beza MS. and the Codex of Robert Stephens to be the same. Wetstein makes the same assertion, and

† MS. Letter, Bene't College Library.

Michaelis thinks it very probable*. The most powerful argument on the other side, is, that neither Stephens nor Beza, both of whom published editions of the Greek Testament, and were extremely intimate, take any notice of this agreement. Bishop Marsh has summed up the evidence on both sides (and this is a most curious question with biblical critics) with great precision and judgment; and without delivering his own opinion, leaves the conclusion to the determination of his readers†. Let this suffice for the history of the manuscript.

Next for the antiquity.—If Beza's intimation carried any authority, that this MS. had been in the monastery of St. Irenæus, and had been there from the time of that father, this would carry some weight in ascertaining its age; or, if only his assertion be admitted, that it was corrupted by the ancient heretics, this would bring the matter to a probability, within the second, third, fourth, fifth, or sixth centuries, when the Valentinians, Sabellians, and Arians, and others, were most active‡; but as this rests on the bare assertion of Beza, or, at least, as corrupting MSS. was practised by the Catholics, and in different periods§, as well as by heretics, this declaration leaves the matter very vague. Nor can any thing be determined from the paleness or the yellowness of the letter. Some comparatively modern writings have soon become pale or yellow, through the quality of the ink, or from the persons' mode of writing; or from the place in which the writings have been kept: but the paleness and yellowness of the writing, and other appearances, taken in connexion with the uncial form of the letters, being the most quadrated too of that form, together with their having neither breathings, accents, nor the sections *, prove it to be a MS. of very great antiquity †.

Mr. Whiston supposed this MS. as old as the second century ; but, though he was well read in Christian antiquities, the opinion of a man who could form such wild opinions about the apostolical constitutions, will carry but little weight here. Doctor Waterland ‡ supposed that there was scarcely such a thing to be found as a MS. of the fourth century ; higher, none at all. These were both very learned men. The opinion of Montfaucon, who had not only perused almost every thing published on ancient Greek MSS. but who himself had explored all the more valuable libraries in Italy and France, begins only from the third century, and the manuscript he alluded to he said had long since perished through antiquity and rust ; and he continues his inquiries thence through the fifth and succeeding centuries. Wetstein, who copied the Codex Bezae at Cambridge, supposed it to be of the fifth, and Mr. Marsh did not think himself authorized to ascribe to it a higher antiquity §, though he at the same time, with other critics, declares his belief, that it is the most ancient Greek MS. in the world : and this is all that shall be attempted here on the antiquity of this Codex.

Lastly, as to the use that has been made of it.—

Of Beza's Greek Testament Mr. Porson justly observes, “ as a critical work it has very little merit. Ignorant of the true use of various readings, he (Beza) seldom mentions them but to support his own hypothesis, to which godly purpose he warps both text and interpretation. He makes his commentary (as indeed he partly boasts himself) a vehicle for abuse on Origen, Erasmus, and Castalio, especially the latter, against whom he indulges, without restraint, the exquisite rancour of theological hatred*." Beza, however, though he thought his Codex ought not to be published, on account of the corruptions by heretics, made great use of it himself, having observed in it, he says, some things of great moment. Its various readings were, I believe, first collected by Patricius Junius. Archbishop Usher collated the Elzevir edition by it —; and he gave its various readings to Walton, who has made use of them in the sixth tome of the London Polyglot, printed in 1657.

Dr. Mill published his edition of the Greek Testament at Oxford in 1707, and it was reprinted at Rotterdam in 1710. He has treated largely on the Codex Bezae in his Prolegomena. He says, that the Greek has been wonderfully corrupted, though originally derived from the very same fountains whence flowed the Italian version; and that it was corrupted by the Latin scribes†. Other critics, as learned, assert the contrary, maintaining that all the Græco-Latin Codices have been altered from the Greek, where some have supposed the Greek to be altered from the Latin‡. Mill, notwithstanding his opinion of its being a corrupted apograph from a purer exemplar, makes frequent use of it in his Greek Testament.

Wetstein published his grand edition of the New Testament, in two volumes folio, at Rotterdam, in 1781. He copied the whole, as observed before, of this manuscript at Cambridge, with his own hand. He has written very largely about it in his Prolegomena, and expresses himself with great warmth, and even bitterness, against Beza. He accuses the Greek manuscripts of being corrupted from the Latin, though he pays great deference to the Codex Bezae, and makes frequent use of it under the mark D.

Dr. Harwood published the New Testament, collated with the most approved MSS. in London, 1776, and, from conviction that Beza's manuscript and the Clermont MS. approached the nearest of any MSS. now known in the world to the original text of the sacred records, he makes the former a sort of basis to his edition of the Four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles; and this circumstance (though it is very incorrectly printed) gives a value to Harwood's Greek Testament.

Professor Michaelis published, in German, Introductory Letters to the sacred Books of the New Testament. Four editions of it were published at Gottingen. Concerning the three first, there is a letter from Michaelis, in the Gentleman's Magazine, Sept. 1781. Of the first edition, an English translation was published at London in 1750, but the translator's name I do not know. In this edition Michaelis does but cursorily mention the Codex Bezaë with the other MSS. He says, in passing, that this MS. was thought, and on good grounds, to be corrupted from the Latin version. But he acknowledges, in his letter to Dr. Marsh, that the first edition was a work of haste, and that the learned Wetstein and himself had both formed a false judgment on these important manuscripts*. In the second vol. of his last edition, he writes largely about the Codex Bezaë†, and assigns reasons for his thinking "that its readings are for the most part genuine, and of course preferable to those of other manuscripts." Dr. Marsh, in his Translation of Michaelis's Introduction in 1793, has enlarged on some of Michaelis's observations, and corrected some of his opinions; and Dr. Marsh was favourably circumstanced by his residence at Cambridge, and no less qualified by the course of his studies, for this task.

Greisbach published at Halle, in Germany, a Greek Testament, in two vols. in 1775 and 1777; and it was reprinted at the expense of the Duke of Grafton in 1796, accompanied with a short preface, dated Jena, 1796. He vindicates his own opinion and use of the ancient Greek MSS. and thinks that his Theory of Criticism was confirmed by what he had seen published of the Cambridge (Beza) and other ancient MSS. He expresses himself strongly against Michaelis's "opinionem inveteratam de codicibus et versionibus Latinizantibus," which Michaelis, however, had himself then given up, and which inveterate opinion Greisbach very strongly opposes. He makes great use of the readings of the Beza MS. in his elaborate edition, which is a text book in the German universities, and in great repute among scripture critics in England.

* Pref.

These few slight observations are the result of such examinations of the MS. as I have occasionally made, under the correction of such writers, our best critics in these matters, as I have mentioned above: and such is the plan, which I propose following hereafter. It would be easy to enlarge; but the length of this epistle already demands an apology, which must be, that the Codex Bezae is, perhaps, the most ancient and valuable Greek MS. extant, and that I may probably make it a sort of stepping stone in my advances to other MSS.

P. S. I sent a few pieces, and very few, relating to books in public libraries, to the Athenæum and Monthly Magazine; many papers on this subject I have by me. But I, of course, introduce nothing here but what concerns the Libraries at Cambridge. I soon dropped any particular inquiries concerning the Athanasian Creed. But that it is frequently subjoined to very ancient MSS. may be seen in the Actus Apostolorum, Bodl. and the Alex. MS. Brit. Mus. two of our oldest MSS. as well as from Archbishop Usher's Diatrise de Rom. Eccl. Symbolo Apostolico Vetere, and Dr. Waterland's Critical Hist. of the Athanasian Creed.

OF MSS. IN BENE'T COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Communicated to the Athenæum, Dec. 1807.

SOME time since I gave a short account of the libraries in the British Museum. It would be in order if I could give a similar account of all the libraries in the University of Cambridge: but an account of these would much exceed the usual length of your literary articles, and it will easily be believed, that I am by no means equal to the task. My limits and my powers, therefore, being necessarily so circumscribed, I shall confine myself to one library, but that, in some respects, the most important of any in the University of Cambridge, and more resembling Sir Robert Cotton's, in the British Museum*, than any in this country. I must, however, be supposed to allude to its contents, not to its size; and it will be immediately understood, that I can mean no other than that, consisting entirely of manuscripts, belonging to Corpus Christi, and the B. Virgin Mary, commonly called Bene't College.

No one acquainted with the strict law by which this library was hedged in by the founder, will expect a very particular account of its contents, except from a resident Fellow, nor from him, unless peculiarly privileged and indulged.

The law alluded to is this: "Ea enim est Lex hujus Bibliothecæ a fundatore sancita, ut neque socius aliquis solus eam adire potest, sed semper alio socio vel scholari comitatus, neque plusquam tres codices in cameram suam asportare, idque non sine licentiâ magistri duorumq: sociorum prius impetrata."

But the law of the donor here alluded to by Nasmyth is stricter still. The books were to be kept (as they still are) under three locks, the keys of which were ordered to be in the possession of the Master, and of the keepers of the Billingsford Hutch.

Further, the time of consulting them is prescribed. In winter seasons, the hours being from eight to eleven o'clock in the morning, and from one to four in the afternoon. In the summer, from six to eleven, and from one to five. The library also is subject to an annual visitation from the Masters of Gonville and Caius College, and of Trinity Hall. The loss of a single leaf is subject to a small fine; the loss of a whole book to a fine to be levied at the discretion of the visitors; but should it ever happen that six MSS. in folio, eight in quarto, and twelve of a smaller size, should be lost, the whole library becomes forfeited, together with all the plate left by the donor to the society.

It will be readily believed, from the nature of the law, and the great strictness with which it has been obeyed, from the first founding of the library down to the present day, that the books have been preserved entire: but this belief must be exercised no further than the Society is concerned; for it appears from the donor's MS. catalogue, which lies on the table in the library, that between the time the books were left to the College and the time they were received, there must have been committed at least some mistakes; some titles of books being in that catalogue, and yet the books themselves not to be found in the library.

As to myself, all that I shall say is this—that I have been occasionally indulged, though not a Fellow, with the perusal of MSS. deposited in this collection, and have availed myself of the labours of a person, who was not only a resident Fellow, but who employed much industry and ability in giving a report of its invaluable contents.

These MSS. then, were left to Bene't College by Matthew Parker, Archbishop of Canterbury in 1557, who had formerly been Fellow of this society, and in 1544 had been appointed Master; a man of considerable learning, and par-

Parker's situation had been peculiarly favourable to his pursuits as an antiquary. In 1535 he had been appointed Dean of the collegiate church of Stoke Clare, in Suffolk, and continued to govern this college till the dissolution of monasteries in the reign of Edward VI. He, at that memorable period, became possessed of several valuable manuscripts, that belonged to Stoke; and, by an order of Privy Council, bearing date July 5, 1568, he, or his deputies, were authorized to view and peruse all the records and monuments belonging to the late dissolved monasteries; and thus he became possessed of many important writings relative to the history and antiquities of this country.

The collection of MSS. therefore, that we are now inquiring into, will readily be supposed to take its complexion from the character and pursuits of the founder. He was an ecclesiastic, by his profession, much interested in those studies and controversies which found employment for men of talents in the 15th and 16th centuries. It accordingly comprehends numerous writings of the ancient fathers, legends of the saints, papers relating to the disputes between the catholics and protestants, together with expositions and commentaries on the scriptures. It likewise contains some mass books and ancient liturgies, with a few psalters, gospels, and vulgate bibles. The most splendid MS. in the whole library, on account of the illuminations, is a book of the Revelations, written in the 14th century, a Latin version, with a French translation on the side, in verse. It is accompanied with an account of the coronation of the kings of England, written by the same scribe, and accompanied with a fine illumination. It is in French, and entitled "Manere de Coroner novel Roy (d'Angleterre.)" The grandest manuscript is a Latin vulgate bible, in two folio volumes, as big as a church bible: the oldest is, the Gospels, in Latin.

Here are a few old English and Saxon poems, and French romances in verse, and these not a little curious: some of them have never been printed, and the presumption is, that one of them, in old English, entitled, "The Romaunce of the St. Graal," has not even been read through for these two or three hundred years at least. It consists of more than 40,000 lines. Nasmyth acknowledges that he was deterred from the perusal of it; and Archbishop Parker himself seems to have been but imperfectly acquainted with its contents, or thought but meanly of the work.

There are scarcely any classics, and the few that are here found are neither very ancient nor of any great account. The two or three Greek MSS. are modern; there is, however, a fair MS. of Terence's plays, as old as the twelfth century.

Numbers CVI. CVIII. CXVIII. and CCXLII. contain many curious papers relative to the ancient customs, laws, and privileges, of the University of Cambridge. These have often been of great consequence as books of reference, and many of them are copied by Strype, in his Life of Archbishop Parker, and by Baker and Cole, into their valuable collections. A curious book, containing an account of the rentals, property, &c. of the college, as old as 1376, together with other papers in this library, as containing some of the archives of the house, were of great use to Mr. MASTERS, in writing his useful work, the History of Bene't College.

Number CXIV. entitled Epistolæ Principum, contains two Letters from Pope Julius II. to Henry VIII.; Henry VIIIth's commendatory Letter for Dr. Parker to be appointed Master of Bene't College; one from Queen Catharine, and some of Queen Elizabeth's; but most of them are letters written to Parker himself, when Archbishop of Canterbury, from different persons, nobility and gentry, sometimes on private business, and sometimes on matters of a more public nature. No. CXIX. entitled "Epistolæ Virorum illustrium," answers its title more exactly, being all from distinguished men, either princes, nobles, or reformers.

But the most interesting, useful, and characteristic part of the present collection embraces the history, laws, antiquities, and government, of this country. It includes histories of England, annals, chronicles, polychronicons, Saxon laws, a few in the Saxon character, constitutions, &c. It comprehends, of course, what must be called the fabulous, no less than the genuine and true history of Britain.

It was in reference to this part of the collection that Dr. Fuller, in his History of Cambridge, called it "the Sun of English Antiquity, till it was eclipsed by that of Sir Robert Cotton," and as Mr. Masters adds, "very justly, since it contained more materials relating to the history of this kingdom, both civil and ecclesiastical, than could have before been met with any where else."

With respect to the antiquity of these MSS. the greater part of them are of the 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries; several of them of the 11th, 12th, and 13th; some of the 10th, and a few of the 9th. The Latin Gospels alluded to above is two or three centuries older.

But thus much must suffice for the present.—The libraries of the University of Cambridge are a vast object, and I must leave it abruptly:

Ὡς δ' ὅτ' ἀνὴρ ———
 Στήν' ἐπ' ὠκυρῶν πῶλα μὲν ἀλαδί προρροῦντι, Ἀφρῶ μορμαυροῦντα ἰδὼν, ἀνὰ τ' ἰδραμ' ὀπίσσω.

ILIAD. E. V.

With respect to this library, concerning which a few imperfect hints have here been thrown out, it has been frequently lamented that so useful a repository should be so scrupulously guarded. But before we judge of actions, we should trace the causes: we should inquire into the circumstances of the time in which Archbishop Parker lived, and not too hastily say, that he marred a noble present by the ungracious manner in which it was conferred.

Prior to the invention of printing, people could have only MSS. and these were very scarce and valuable; the consequence was, that the temptation to steal them was very great. And even some years after the invention of printing, the books in circulation were very few, and very liable to be purloined. This occasioned the monks often to prefix to their books the most serious warnings, and the most direful anathemas. At the time Caius published his History of the Antiquities of Cambridge, he informs us, that most of the books had disappeared from the Public Library, and similar spoliations had been committed at Oxford.

We should then consider the untoward circumstances of the times, of which Parker could not fail to have a perfect recollection; and though we may lament the severity of the law, we shall easily find an apology for the Archbishop.

Various other benefactions were bestowed on this society by Matthew Parker; and the College-library was enriched by him with many printed books. These must, of course, have been some of the early printed ones, and on that account, if on no other, must be valuable. These things, however, I shall not attempt to discuss now.

P. S. I have already taken some notice in the present Work (the Privileges, &c.) of this Library. This present account is more particular. Mr. Tyson, formerly Fellow of this College, a well-informed antiquary, published (in 1770) An Account of an illuminated MS. in this Library; a French Translation of Cardinal Bonaventure's Life of Christ. It is deemed very curious, more particularly on account of a genuine Portrait of our illustrious King, treshault, tresfort, et tres victorieux, Prince Henry Quint, &c. as it reads in the MS.—Of the Pepysian Library, Magd. Col. an account is given in another part of this work.

LETTER

To the Editor of the Athenæum.

IN EMMANUEL COLLEGE LIBRARY.

I AM obliged to your correspondent E, for setting me right concerning the person who presented Wickliffe's Bible to St. John's College, in the University of Oxford, and for his manner of doing it, in admitting that the error was but a slight one. The truth, indeed, is, that book was not the subject of my inquiry: I did but incidentally mention what I had very cursorily examined. Had that MS. been the subject of my paper, I should have been more minute in my inquiries. I had perused Wickliffe's Bible in this library some time since, and concerning its donor, as I had made no memorandum, I spake from recollection. It occurred to me, that a member of the society informed me, if I recollect right, that the book was one of those given by Laud; and an Oxford antiquary, not over remarkable, I own, for his correctness, has so expressed himself, as might easily have led one, speaking from memory, to the same conclusion. However, your correspondent is, I find, right: and (as I have collected) from his local situation, and his well-known acquaintance with the books in St. John's College Library, was likely to be so.

Your correspondent says, "there is a MS. of the Testament (meaning Wickliffe's Translation of the New Testament) at Emmanuel College." There are three copies of a Translation, ascribed to Wickliffe, in Emmanuel College Library; one a folio copy, comprehending the Old and New Testament, as that in St. John's College Library in Oxford does: the other two contain only the New Testament, like that in the Library of Worcester Cathedral. Whether they are copies of the same version, though somewhat differently translated, I cannot now ascertain, not being on the spot to examine*.

This circumstance I notice here, to guard against a misconception of what was said in a former paper. I said that Matth. iii. 4. ἀγρίαις, Locustæ, Locusts, was translated, hony soukis. Now I recollect, that on turning to this passage in the folio copy in Emmanuel College Library, it read hony soklis, or hony socles, I forget which; and so, probably, it will be found to read in the folio copy in St. John's College Library, and others. I recollect, also, seeing the same word, Locustæ, translated in the small copies in Emmanuel Library, containing only the New Testament, hony soukis, in the same manner as it reads in the copy belonging to Worcester Cathedral Library. Bishop Wilson in loco also has noticed this reading, hony soukis, in Wickliffe's translation; but they are the same words differently spelt.

The above Letter, the reader will perceive, was in consequence of one communicated by a learned gentleman on something said by me in a former number of the Athenæum.

The reader perhaps may not dislike a specimen of this old Translation.

Matt. iii. "In tho dais Jon Baptist cam: and prechid in the desert of Judee and seed do ye penaunce for the kingdom of hevenes shall neighe: for this is he of whom it is seid bi isaye the profete seyng, a vois of a crier in desert!

* On since collating these three books, at least the prefaces, and third chapter in each book, and finding them exactly alike, except where a few words are spelt differently in the different copies, I conclude, they are one and the same translation. Nothing, indeed, is more common than for the same word to be spelt differently in the same book (of our old English writers, Wickliffe and Chaucer) frequently in the same paragraph, and even the same line.

make ye redy the weies of the Lord, make ye right the pathis of him; and this Jon hadde clothing of camel's heeris, and a girdle of skyn aboute his leendis and his mete was bonysoles and hony of the wode. Thanne Jerusalem wente out to him and alle Judee and all the countre aboute Jordan: and thei werin washe of him in Jordan."

 "Wickliffe's Translation of the New Testament, was finished 1383, and this copy was written A. 1397. See (in the MS.) the bottom of the Calendar of the month Feb."

Having an opportunity of examining the MSS. of Emmanuel College Library, at present, I cannot refrain from adding a few words more.

I have had occasion to notice somewhere that Emman. Col. Libr. contains one of the best collections of printed books in the University. In MSS. it is not so abundant as several others, particularly Trinity, Peter-House, Caius, Bene't, and Pembroke Hall; still it possesses many, and some are very valuable ones: a few, deemed perhaps the more curious or valuable, shall be noticed.

1. A duodecimo, elegant, and deemed valuable, though not very ancient, containing Paul's, and the Catholic, Epistles, beginning with the latter. It is mutilated in a few places: and is not clear till 2 Pet. 2. 4.; and there is also a chasm from Heb. ii. 27, to the end of that Epistle; its different readings have been noticed by some of the more eminent critics. It was given to the Library by Samuel Wright, formerly alumnus of this College.

2. Herodotus's History, very elegantly written: it formerly belonged to Archbishop Sancroft. Dr. T. Gale collated it for his edition of Herodotus, but, as Mr. Professor Porson has observed, in a note written at the beginning, very negligently. Dr. Askew collated it more carefully, for the splendid edition of Herodotus, put forth by his friend, Wesseling. But there are some things omitted in this collation; and this will almost necessarily happen, where a great part of the various readings relates, as they do here, to the preserving or neglecting the order of the Dialects. Mr. Porson, therefore, concludes, Dignus certe hic Codex, qui si iterum edetur Herodotus, paullo accuratius iterum examinetur. It has not, I think, yet been so.

Prefixed to this MS. is a treatise in Greek, by the same hand, on the Idioms of the Ionic Dialect, with this title :

Ἀρχὴ συνθεῖν τῶν ἰδιωμάτων τῆς Ἰαδὸς Διαλεκτῆς.

The Copyist ends the work in the same devout manner. At the end is written thus :

Ἡροδοτοῖο βιβλίου κληροῖο πειρας λαβὼν ὡς.

It appears to be not a very ancient MS. but it is reckoned a valuable one, and is entire.

3. A very fine Heb. MS. of the Bible, in 3 vols. fol. Given by Dr. Will. Bedell, Bishop of Dromore, in Ireland, who had been Fellow of this College. He took his degree in 1599. He had been chaplain to Sir Henry Wotton, when ambassador at Venice ; and applying himself to the study of the Heb. language, he procured this MS. through the means of B. Leo, the chief Chacham of the Synagogue. It is said to have cost its weight in silver. See the Bishop's Life, by Bishop Burnet.

Though not so old as two others, which might be pointed out at Cambridge, yet it possesses considerable antiquity ; perhaps 5 or 600 years old.—It has the vowel points, accent, and keri. It is written in columns, but not with the spaces:—it has no coronis. As it was brought from Venice, we are told, it may be considered as a fair specimen of the mixt Italian character*.

4. A fine MS. in four volumes folio, on vellum, of St. Chrysostom's Homilies : it was presented to this Library by the present Dr. Samuel Parr. It appears to be of the 10th or 11th century ; as I possess myself a fine MS. copy of Greg. Nazienzen's Orations, much resembling it both in age and character, which is of about that period.

This Codex contains the last part of the first Homily, the second, and onwards, to the fifteenth inclusive. Vid. Editionem Sancti Hieronymi Savilianam Impressam Etonæ, A. 1612. This reference is made in the Codex.

5. An Essay by Sir Matth. Hales, concerning the soul, written 1673. This also was given to the College by Dr. Parr, who received it from Will. Hargrave, Esq. barrister, Lincoln's Inn, who had purchased it with some other MSS. by Sir Matth. Hales.

It is not in Sir Matthew's own hand-writing. The original of this Treatise, with his own hand-writing, was copied in 1692: it having been lent to Sir Robert Southwell, for that purpose, by his grandson, Matthew Hales, Esq. Lincoln's Inn.

6. Ciceronis Officia; though not a MS. is justly placed among the MSS. Joshua Barnes seems to have thought, almost, that it was a MS. "impressa, quoq. ut vulgo putatur." It was printed at Mentz, in 1465. Ramus, according to Palmer *, thought this edition the first book printed; erroneously enough: for if what Palmer says is correct, it was the last printed by Faust at Mentz. An ample account is given of this edition, amidst many discussions, by Maittaire, and other lexicographers. Mr. Dibdin, our modern lexicographer, says, he has seen two copies of it in the sumptuous library of Lord Spencer; and that his Lordship, having collated them, found them vary†: when, therefore, Dr. Harwood says, "The editio Princeps fol. mogunt. apud Joannim * Ciceronis Officia, quæ primum omnium librorum typis aeneis impressa sunt. P. Rami Schol. Matthem. Lib. 2. as quoted by Palmer in his "Art of Printing," p. 81.

† Introduction to Rare and Valuable Books, &c. 2d edit. p. 101.

Fust. 1465," that it is undoubtedly one of the noblest books in the world, and that a copy sold at Dr. Askew's sale for 30l.*, he must speak of that other edition, which I have not seen. For the Emman. copy is small 4to. Be these matters as they may, whoever compares together this edition of 1565, that of 1566 (in the Pub. Libr. Camb.), and that of the Rhetorica of Cicero, which is also in the same Pub. Libr. will see how rapidly this most wonderful art of printing reached, almost to perfection.

7. Demetrii Chalcondylæ Erotemata, et Moschopuli Syntaxis: this, too, though printed, deserves a place in any library of MSS. It is a sort of Greek Grammar, in pure Greek, of a fine type, fol. printed at Milan, but without a date, placed by Palmer in 1499. Chalcondylas was a native of Constantinople, and this book, with those of other countrymen of his, who fled to Italy, towards the end of the 15th century, seems to have been the basis of our early Greek Grammars †.

This is a rare and valuable book; and there cannot be a more beautiful copy than this Emmanuel one.

8. The Psalms of the Passion, &c. in Old English, on vellum, of the time of the latter end of Rich. II.

9. Statii Thebaidos; the entire work, well written, in small characters.

10. Among the numerous writings of the celebrated Jos. Barnes, (of which some notice is taken in another part of this work) may be mentioned his Latin Poem, in eight books, entitled Franciados, to which he alludes in his Greek Epilogus to Homer's Odyssey, and also his Latino-Græcum Lexicon, which appears to be valuable, and of which the learned editors of Stephanus's Greek Lexicon, (a splendid new edition of which is now carrying on) have, at present, the loan, for the purpose of that publication.

WICKLIFFE'S NEW TESTAMENT.

11. Of the Eastern MSS. also, a slight mention has been made, in the same place, together with the English descriptive Catalogue, made by Sir William Jones, (and is in the Library) when he took his Master of Arts degree from this college.

The above slight sketch, and of only a very few MSS. is given, without any regard to order, according to my different opportunities for perusing them. There are certainly very many more, and some, no doubt, valuable of their kind. But this is all that it was thought necessary to attempt. The Psalms of David, &c. and the Statii Thebaidos, were taken on credit from Joshua Barnes. But I find they are in the Library.

I have elsewhere taken notice of this Library, and given a short account of the picture Gallery, for which, in the proper place, an apology was made; which it is not necessary to repeat here.

N. B. The Latin MSS. perhaps, make a third of the whole. I have, of course, been obliged to be select; and have only inserted here such as relate to the Scriptures, the Latin Fathers, and Latin Classics. It ought to have come in immediately after the Greek MSS. p. 603. But, through distance, I was obliged to study my opportunities and convenience.

N. B. The following are additions to the list of Greek MSS. in the Public Library: that list was selected by me at different times, according to different opportunities, and amidst other pursuits that were the subject of my inquiries. The last time I visited Cambridge, I was obliged to leave my business abruptly, my list not being completed, on account of other business in town. A friend resident at Cambridge kindly undertook to furnish me with a few remaining articles, the sheet containing the list being then in the press. As two or three articles were sent, which did not properly belong to my list, and have therefore been set aside, there may also be a few omissions, which my present distance from Cambridge prevents my supplying. If there are any such, it is hoped they will be very few. This list also, as well as those above of Greek, Eastern, and Latin MSS. I communicated to the Classical Journal.
